Abstract	The increase of refugee status claiming immigrants in Canada has led to a review of the immigration policy concerning this group. This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a humanitarian and generous refugee policy and questions of balancing efficiency with procedural fairness to claimants. Gives a chronology of events since 1969.

Résumé	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (•). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fiched product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquérir les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.
2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.
3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.
4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.
5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

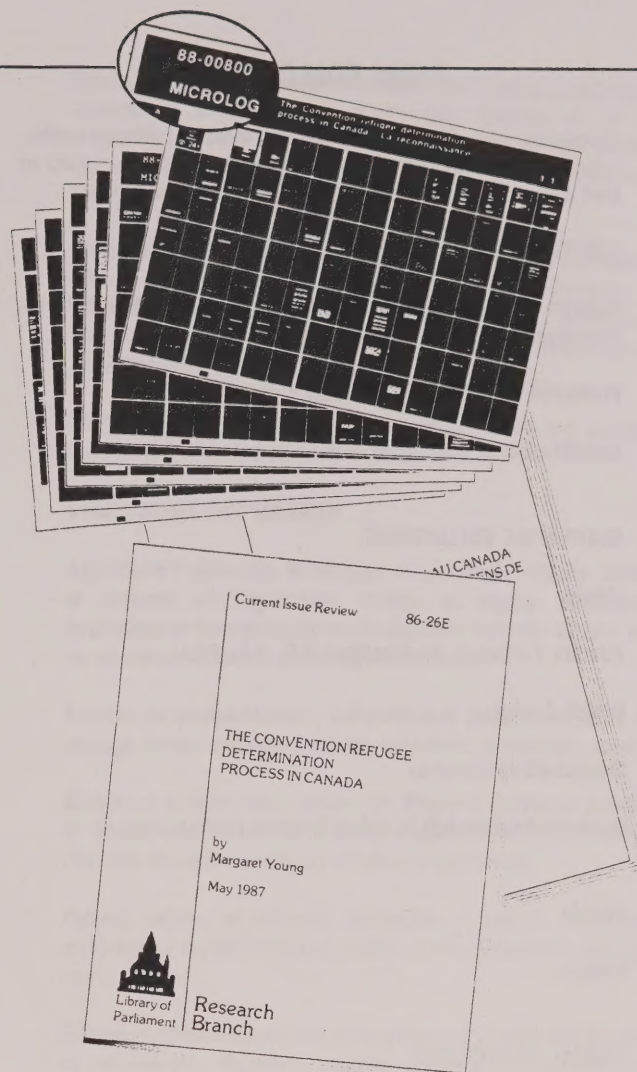

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

Le syndrome "pas-dans-ma-cour" (PDMC) est devenu une réaction fréquente à divers types de nouveaux ensembles résidentiels, non seulement les logements sociaux, mais aussi les logements abordables et innovateurs qui sont mis sur le marché. Ce syndrome peut entraîner des retards importants et des coûts supplémentaires ainsi que des moments de frustration pour les promoteurs d'un ensemble; il peut de même entraîner l'annulation d'un ensemble. Ce document présente une étude de cas sur une stratégie de gestion pour faire face au syndrome PDMC.

Abundance, age, size, sex and coded wire tag recoveries for chinook salmon escapement of Kitsumkalum River, 1994

By T.C. Nelson. Vancouver, BC : Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans, Biological Sciences Branch, 1995. viii, 48 p. : Bibl. (Canadian manuscript report of fisheries and aquatic sciences / Canada. Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans ; no. 2332 ISSN 0706-6473) CCG-P no. Fs 97-4/2332E MICROLOG 96-02103 (1 fiche)

This report is part of a series describing the escapement monitoring and biological sampling of chinook in the Kitsumkalum River. The escapement of chinook salmon was calculated using the adjusted Petersen method by tagging live chinook in situ and recovering carcasses. Separate population estimates were calculated for each sex for both the upper and lower sections of the river. A total estimate for the in-river escapement of chinook was calculated by summing the individual estimates. In this report potential biases in the Petersen method, the live tagging approach, and the method of stratification are discussed. Assumptions for the methods used and the tests for biases caused by violations of assumptions are also described in the methods section. The results section presents the population estimates, tests for bias in tagging and recovery, population composition and the results of coded wire tagging studies. The results are then discussed with respect to previous studies.

Dept. of Fisheries & Oceans ; no. 2325 ISSN 0706-6473) CCG-P no. Fs 97-4/2325E MICROLOG 96-02268 (1 fiche)

This report is part of a series describing the escapement monitoring and biological sampling of chinook salmon in the Campbell/Quinsam River system. The escapements of chinook salmon were calculated using the adjusted Petersen method by tagging carcasses to produce separate estimates for sexes and rivers and summing these to form a total estimate for the in-river escapement of chinook. The total recovery of chinook salmon at the Quinsam Hatchery was then added to the in-river estimates to produce a final escapement figure for the entire system. The report discusses potential biases in the Petersen method, carcass tagging method, and method of stratification and provides results of population estimates, tests for bias in tagging and recovery, population composition (age, length, and sex), and the results of coded wire tagging studies.

The Accounting industry in New England : mini market study

By Donna Allan. Boston, MA : Canadian Consulate General, 1993. 25 p.
MICROLOG 96-02559 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this study is to provide a general overview of the accounting industry in New England for Canadians interested in exporting to or entering that market. The study begins with a review of the accounting market, its areas of specialization, market trends, industry structure, growth and competition, and types of services offered. It then reviews consumer behavior, barriers to market entry, and channels of distribution. The study concludes with a brief evaluation of the potential for Canadian entry into the accounting industry in New England and recommendations regarding such entry. The appendix includes an annotated directory of United States accounting associations and a directory of accounting firms in New England (except Connecticut).

MICROLOG 96-02752 (1 fiche)

Foresters and wildlife biologists are increasingly interested in managing oak forests for acorn production for both oak regeneration and as food for wildlife. The intent of this paper is to present a method for estimating acorn production and preliminary guidelines for the management of acorn production. The focus is on red oak (Quercus rubra L.), although the concepts presented are applicable to other oaks. Sections of the paper cover such topics as the variability in acorn production, factors affecting acorn production, the relation between stocking and acorn production, and rating of acorn-productive trees. Two methods for estimating acorn production are given, one using values of stand average diameter at breast height and density of overstory oaks, the other based on individual tree data from 23 fixed-area plots in the Bancroft District, Ontario. The final section of the paper provides oak management recommendations.

The Activities, conclusions and recommendations of the Interdepartmental Uranium Committee concerning the uranium exploration and mining industries : final report

Nova Scotia. Interdepartmental Uranium Committee. Halifax : The Committee, 1994. xix, 120 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-02619 (2 fiche)

This report documents the activities, conclusions, and recommendations of the Nova Scotia Interdepartmental Uranium Committee since its formation in 1985. The Committee's tasks were related to the uranium exploration and mining industries and the current moratorium on uranium exploration and mining that is due to expire in January 1995. The report begins with background information on the history of uranium exploration and mining in the province, as well as government regulation and action on uranium-related issues. The second section describes Committee activities 1985-89 regarding the releasing of a large part of the province that was closed to all exploration during the Uranium Inquiry (completed in 1985). Subsequent sections discuss issues related to uranium exploration, recent advances in uranium mining technology, radiation dose limits, epidemiological studies and health risk estimates related to uranium mining, and jurisdiction over uranium mining. The report concludes with recommendations on the future of the moratorium.

Adult surgical utilization in Manitoba, 1981-91

By Morris L. Barer, Marni Brownell and Sam B. Sheps. Winnipeg : Manitoba Health, 1994. viii, 155 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-02266 (2 fiche)

This report describes patterns of adult surgery in Manitoba over a ten year period, providing a self-contained analysis of important changes in the province's surgical practices, notably the dramatic expansion in adult outpatient surgery. Tables, figures, and discussion attempt to analyze that shift in volume and pattern of surgical utilization by examining geographic variations, types of surgery, and changes in the complexity and severity of surgical cases handled by different regions and hospitals. The focus of the report is on the source of adult surgical patients treated in Winnipeg hospitals, particularly in the two tertiary care hospitals. The second section of the report, and accompanying appendices, describe the methods used to create and analyze an extensive database containing hospital records. The third section reviews provincial trends, regional patterns, Winnipeg hospital patterns, and mortality rates. The final section discusses key policy implications and suggests further research.

Advancing the fleet, building the province : a ten-year development plan for BC ferries

British Columbia Ferry Corporation. Victoria : The Corporation, 1995. 22 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-02161 (1 fiche)

BC Ferries currently operates a fleet of 40 vessels on 24 routes, carrying over 22 million passengers and eight million vehicles. Many of its vessels are aging and require replacement in the near future, and effective capacity is being reached on some routes. To contend with future needs for significant fleet replacement, capacity expansion to meet growing demand, and demand management routing of traffic for efficient operations, the corporation has formulated a ten-year development plan which is described in this document. The plan is divided into five parts: a major routes strategy to relieve congestion and distribute traffic growth; a minor and northern routes strategy; upgrading of major and minor route terminals; additional capital rehabilitation; and initiatives in pricing and reservations. The document ends with an outline of the socio-economic benefits of the plan and of the corporation's consultations with stakeholders.

Aerospace material processing capabilities in British Columbia – Amended

Prepared for the Aerospace Industry Association of British Columbia ; Canavia Consultants Corp. Vancouver, BC : The Consultants, 1995. v, 45 p.
MICROLOG 96-02107 (1 fiche)

This study examines the current availability of aerospace-related metal finishing processes in western Canada and the capability of these processes to meet industry requirements. The study identified three industry groups: original equipment manufacturers, repair and overhaul shops, and outside processors. Study methodology relied on a questionnaire survey, interviews with industry representatives, and published information. Some information on aerospace-related metal finishing processors in the rest of Canada and in Washington State is also provided for comparison. The study concludes with a discussion of the in-province market for aerospace-related metal finishing, the feasibility of establishing metal processing facilities in British Columbia, and alternatives to the objective of improving local processing capability. The appendix contains a copy of the survey questionnaire and a list of companies contacted.

This directory provides information on options in the affordable housing market. Information came from surveys mailed out to agencies, services and organizations, associations on Housing Dept. mailing lists, and to those included in 'specialty' housing or social service directories. Explains the different kinds of rental housing and gives listings for non-profits, co-operative and special needs housing; gives tips on looking for housing, then lists community resources and registries which will help find homes; provides a list of emergency shelters in the City; gives legal information about tenancy agreements, and is followed by listings of legal clinics for landlords and for tenants; and lists housing development resources, such as associations, government agencies and non-profit housing consultants. Also lists housing providers which have City of Toronto addresses, and some community and housing resources outside the City, if they serve City residents. Note that this directory is only for the City of Toronto, which does not include North York, East York, Scarborough, York or Etobicoke.

L'Alphabétisation, ça bouge : guide pour des programmes d'alphabétisation intégrés

North York, ON : Institut Roeher, 1994. viii, 34 p. : Bibl. L'éd. anglaise (Literacy in motion...) : 94-03602/1. ISBN 1-895070-52-X. MICROLOG 96-02723 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

Ce manuel offre un certain nombre de perceptions et d'expériences que les éducateurs en alphabétisation, dans leur effort pour une plus grande intégration, ont voulu partager avec d'autres. Parmi eux, certains nous offrent le résultat de leurs années d'expérience, d'autres nous font partager leur expérience d'encadrement d'une seule personne. Le chapitre 1 présente un aperçu systématique des différents programmes d'alphabétisation existant au Canada. Le chapitre 2 illustre, grâce à une série de portraits, comment chaque exemple de programme apporte quelque chose aux personnes présentant une déficience intellectuelle, et le chapitre 3 étudie les éléments essentiels d'une intégration réussie. Le chapitre 4 montre comment dix stratégies ont réussi. Enfin, le chapitre 5, plus particulièrement axé sur les tuteurs, envisage les problèmes soulevés par l'alphabétisation, sous un format de type question-réponse. La conclusion aborde les défis que nous devons relever et propose quelques directions à prendre.

Alternative development standards, monitoring report : Gloucester pilot project, first report, June-December 1994

Ottawa-Carleton (Ont.). Planning & Property Dept. Policy Division. Ottawa : Monitoring Committee on ADS-Gloucester Project, 1995. 28 p. : ill. MICROLOG 96-02238 (1 fiche)

In support of the work of a committee that drafted alternative development standards for Ottawa-Carleton, and to respond to concerns about maintenance of municipal services and traffic safety resulting from implementation of those standards, the Regional Municipality undertook a pilot project to monitor a subdivision designed according to those standards. The project compared that subdivision to a nearby subdivision built to conventional suburban standards. The present document is the first monitoring report from that project, presenting data from June to December 1994. The project objectives include reduction of development costs, provision of safe and effective servicing, and ensuring safety. The report describes the ways that the project is measuring progress toward those objectives and presents such results as development cost comparisons, housing prices, and cost efficiency of municipal servicing.

Outre les modèles phénologiques appropriés qui existent aujourd'hui, la prévision des phénomènes saisonniers à des fins de lutte intégrée requiert également l'utilisation de données de température adéquates, l'exécution d'un grand nombre de simulations et l'interprétation et la représentation des résultats d'une manière qui se prête à la prise de décisions. BioSIM, un outil logiciel créé par le Service canadien des forêts, a été conçu à cette fin. Ce rapport présente une analyse de la performance de BioSIM comme outil de prévision de la phénologie des populations de tordeuses des bourgeons de l'épinette au Nouveau-Brunswick, en 1992 et 1993, à partir des modèles de Régnière et de Lysyk.

Time-integrating correlators can be used to compare signals based on the amplitude of the correlation peaks produced by the correlator. This technical note contains an analysis and an optimization of the data collection process of a time-integrating correlator where factors such as the format of the light distribution produced by the correlator and the size, position, and sensitivity response of the elements of the detector array are taken into consideration. The features of the detection process have been studied by computer simulation and optimal conditions of operation allowing a reliable detection of the correlation peaks over the whole operating window have been established. The note includes description of experimental verifications of the optimal detection process.

G. Lachapelle...et al. Ottawa : Geomatics Canada, 1995. 10 p. : ill., Bibl. From Institute of Navigation National Technical Meeting. MICROLOG 96-02601 (1 fiche)

This paper analyzes the accuracy performance of single-point (absolute) aircraft positioning using post-mission precise orbit and 30-second satellite clock corrections provided by permanent Global Positioning System (GPS) tracking network services under selective availability. The investigators assessed the accuracy through a comparison of single-point coordinates with corresponding differential GPS-derived coordinates. The platform utilized for the evaluation was a P-3 Orion aircraft and the flight tests totalled about 40 hours, spread over six days, off the east coast of Florida. A second reference station was used to assess the effect of station location and distance from the aircraft on the consistency of the differential GPS solutions.

To determine if acidification-related chemical variables had changed over 1983-91, the investigators analyzed monotonic trends for precipitation concentrations and deposition at six sites and surface water concentrations at 111 sites from central Ontario to eastern Newfoundland. This report presents the results of those studies, and characterizes the changes in water quality for selected sampling sites in Ontario, Québec, Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland over the same period. The report updates earlier studies and attempts to develop a suitable water quality indicator in terms of acidic deposition.

This paper describes a method for performing a stress analysis of a ship structural detail using the results from an analysis using the computer code MAESTRO, developed for the finite element analysis of the global structural behavior of ship hulls. The method was a top-down procedure where a portion of the MAESTRO model was modelled in considerable detail using a detailed finite element grid with boundary nodes matching the MAESTRO model. The displacements obtained at the boundary nodes from the MAESTRO analysis were applied to the refined model and a finite element analysis was carried out using the VAST finite element program. The paper compares the results using MAESTRO analysis alone and using MAESTRO combined with a top-down procedure with respect to their accuracy in determining the stresses that occur in structural details.

The Antigonish Movement was a cooperative movement that promoted structural change and economic development in eastern Nova Scotia. The Movement began in the 1920s as a response to deteriorating socio-economic conditions, and had considerable success in improving market mechanisms for small producers, expanding the consumption and production horizons of the population, increasing the degree of commercialization and diversification, and bringing new resources into production. This paper reviews the history of the Movement and explores issues that made the Movement a success in involving local communities in their own economic development. The main purpose of the paper is to identify the changes that have taken place over the years and to infer from these changes the present options and possibilities for the Movement.

The Arctic Environmental Strategy is a six-year Green Plan initiative whose overall goal is to preserve and enhance the integrity, health, biodiversity, and productivity of Arctic ecosystems. This report is a summary of studies conducted under one of the Strategy's four programs, the Action on Water Program, from 1991 to 1994. The report organizes the summaries in five broad subject areas: aquatic ecosystem evaluation, focusing on the evaluation of ecosystem health; community health issues, specifically the potential effects of human settlements on health and water quality; sustainable development issues, notably those related to mining; predictions, forecasting, and modelling; and education on water treatment. Information given in each summary includes name and address of project coordinator, project objectives, project description, results to date, and publications generated.

This book is a collection of articles from people throughout the Americas examining the rights of all children, in particular children with disabilities. The contributors look at such issues as what these rights are and how their denial affects children's lives; the impact of an increasingly fast-paced, morally dazed world on families and children; how poverty, lack of services, and institutionalization affect children and their families; and how policy influences children's rights to justice, medical treatment, day care, and education. A number of articles focus on partnerships in community living as a means of strengthening the family through policy initiatives, promoting the rights of children through social policy, and strengthening communities through policy and program initiatives. Personal stories from children with disabilities and their family members illustrate the points raised.

The study discusses the following issues regarding VIS Program implementation: targeting requests for a VIS from particular victims; the VIS document and its usefulness; the use of the VIS by the crown attorney; consideration of VISs by judges; and other uses of the VIS by the justice system. The study section on impacts evaluates VIS impacts on justice system actors, victims, and offenders. The study ends with respondent feedback on the overall administrative model for the VIS Program and a discussion of the issue of automatic filing of VISs.

This study examined the reasons why students who have been identified as exceptional communicational: specific learning disabled (S.L.D.) in their elementary years have chosen to remain in school or to drop out. The study took the form of a narrative, biographical enquiry and used an ethnographic interview approach in order to study the lives and educational experiences of six students between the ages of seventeen and nineteen years.

Three were enrolled full-time in a composite secondary school and plan to complete their diploma requirements. The remaining three students were dropouts. An examination of the biographical data and school histories of each student, juxtaposed with the information and perceptions shared during their individual interviews, offered remarkable insight into the social, school and student factors which contributed to their decisions to either remain in school or to drop out. The results revealed, firstly, that numerous social, school and student factors among the individuals within each separate group were found to exist. Secondly, elements common to all six students were discovered, especially as they pertain to school factors.

This discussion paper identifies communications problems currently facing residents of the Yukon and describes a number of policy options which are being considered for the development of an integrated and comprehensive communications policy. The paper outlines eight components of a communications policy for the territory which takes into account the stated needs, desires, and aspirations of Yukoners. Four policy options are considered: an essentially status-quo option, an option focusing on improving the service provided by the Community Radio and Television System, an extension of the previous option to the provision of all Yukon communities with access to an increased level of broadcasting and telecommunications services, and a further extension of the third option to ensure services more closely equivalent to those available in other areas of Canada. Under each option, possible initiatives in each of the eight policy components are discussed.

Building full cost accounting into resource decisions for the Fraser Basin

By Timothy L. McDaniels. Ottawa : Environment Canada, 1994. ii, 35 p. : Bibl. On cover: Fraser River Action Plan.
MICROLOG 96-02230 (1 fiche)

This report is concerned with the potential use of full cost accounting as an approach to improve decision making about resource use in the Fraser River basin. The report begins by introducing the concept of full cost accounting and why it is relevant to Fraser basin planning. The next section introduces the kinds of resource decision contexts in which full cost accounting could be applied, and section three discusses the central role of values in Fraser basin decisions within the context of good decision practice. The report discusses two alternative analytical frameworks for full cost accounting: social benefit-cost analysis and multiple objective economic analysis, each involving different approaches to eliciting value judgements through questioning of individuals. The final sections discuss a hypothetical example that illustrates differences between these two approaches, an institutional context for full cost accounting, and steps needed for implementation.

Informal caregivers are the unpaid people who provide care for family and friends who may be frail, disabled, or chronically or terminally ill. The British Columbia Seniors' Advisory Council is concerned that these caregivers receive the support and recognition they need, as the burden on the province's over 152,000 informal caregivers is increasing due to such as health funding restraints, aging of the population, and a shift to community-based health care delivery models. This paper presents the Council's recommendations to strengthen support for informal care through three types of support services: caregiver services such as respite care, financial and workplace programs, and formal professional services. Recommendations are also included on multicultural and First Nations caregiving, program evaluation, and advocacy for care recipients.

A critical engineering task in satellite system design is the determination of the mission-specific radiation environment the satellite will encounter and how it will impact on satellite performance over the expected mission lifetime. The work presented in this report reflects an ongoing effort to develop the methodology and, where necessary, the computational tools to allow system engineers to design successful space-based platforms for the near-earth space radiation environment. The methodology and computational codes reviewed in this report are applied to estimate the total radiation dose due to electrons and protons for the Odin scientific satellite, scheduled for launch by Sweden in 1997. The report presents radiation dose estimates for spacecraft shielding thicknesses of up to 5 millimeters of aluminum, and compares the estimates with those obtained using different calculation techniques.

This guide examines four alternative planning approaches which have emerged in response to concerns about the livability and sustainability of communities: neo-traditional planning, the pedestrian pocket, cohousing, and the eco-village concept. The guide is intended to aid in evaluating these and other approaches in terms of how they contribute to the development of healthy, sustainable communities. It provides an evaluative framework which defines the essential attributes of a healthy, sustainable community, identifies related planning goals, and identifies some of the tools which communities may use to meet their goals. The guide also presents eight case studies which exemplify the four approaches and reviews these studies to illustrate how the evaluative framework may be applied. The case studies are from British Columbia, Oregon, Alberta, and Ontario, and range in size from a 17-unit housing project to a community for 27,000 people.

This report documents a study of the commercial car/truck washing industry in the basin conducted to determine current industry practices regarding such matters as wash processes, chemical and water use, wastewater pretreatment, and wastewater discharge. The report includes descriptions of detailed investigations conducted at six sites, including chemicals used, water pretreatment facilities, and wastewater analysis results. It also includes an annotated review of the literature on vehicle wash and water management practices, treatment technologies, and regulatory initiatives in various jurisdictions. The report ends with sections on best management practices for fixed commercial vehicle wash facilities and guidelines for mobile vehicle washes.

A Circular polarization selective surface made of resonant helices

By Gilbert A. Morin. Ottawa : Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1995. ix, 38 p. : ill., Bibl. (Report / Defence Research Establishment Ottawa ; no. 1269) MICROLOG 96-02342 (1 fiche)

A circular polarization selective surface (CPSS) is one that reflects one sense of circular polarization but transmits the other sense. This report presents a new CPSS with improved characteristics and discusses potential applications. The new CPSS is made of special square helices supported at their extremities. This CPSS does not need a dielectric support and can be made more transparent than other CPSSs. The researchers simulated the response of the CPSS to a plane wave excitation using the method of moments for thin wires, taking into account mutual coupling and losses. The report includes simulation results and comparison of theoretical calculations with transmission measurements on a fabricated version of the new CPSS. The applications for the new CPSS discussed in the report are in the field of reflector antennas.

Ce document a pour objectif de passer en revue les différentes formules de classification des objets de musée dans le but de servir de catalyseur et de cadre à l'amélioration de la structure formelle et de la normalisation des données qui se trouvent dans la Base de données nationale des sciences humaines du RCIP. Les trois grands objectifs du document sont les suivants : identification des concepts, ou des catégories de connaissances, actuellement utilisés dans les bases de données des sciences humaines du RCIP afin de définir et de classer les objets de musée ; analyse de la manière dont ces concepts se reflètent dans les systèmes actuels de classification des objets de musée, qui fera une place particulière à la Revised Nomenclature for Museum Cataloging et l'Art & Architecture Thesaurus ; et, évaluation de l'application possible de l'Art & Architecture Thesaurus à la Base de données nationale des sciences humaines du RCIP. L'objectif ultime de ce travail est d'apporter assez d'information pour prendre le type de classification à employer dans la Base de données des sciences humaines, sa terminologie et sa structure.

The first section of this report surveys existing discipline-based approaches to museum classification in the context of the Canadian Heritage Information Network humanities databases. This section identifies three major traditions for interpreting and classifying museum objects as developing from the academic fields of ethnology, history, and art history. Each tradition is reviewed in terms of indexing languages and in terms of concepts or groupings which have been used in Network humanities databases. Particular emphasis is placed on the use of the possible application of the Art & Architecture Thesaurus to the National Humanities Database. The second section of the report is a fairly detailed consideration of how that thesaurus could be implemented as a terminological standard for the Network humanities databases and its possible roles as a reference database, a vocabulary source, and an interactive thesaurus.

Over the last two decades, concerted efforts by governments, industry, and the public have resulted in marked improvements in air quality. However, increasing awareness of the environmental and economic costs of pollution is driving renewed efforts to control the release and impacts of air contaminants. The development of a new Clean Air Act will provide the focus for discussing new strategies for managing air quality. Outlined below are a number of areas which new legislation could address. This document aims at developing a set of concepts and approaches that could see incorporation into legislation.

Community policing : is it working and how do we know? A source guide for police practitioners

In view of the increasing necessity and significance of evaluation for police agencies, police boards, and the public, this guide was developed for the broad purpose of introducing the reader to the range of purposes for which evaluation research may be utilized. The guide provides specific information on how to achieve a reasonably complete picture of program performance, and while it can be used to explore the performance of any police program, specific attention is paid to issues relating to the evaluation of community policing. To this end, the guide introduces the means and methods for conducting three types of evaluations: program monitoring evaluation, which measures the extent to which the program reaches its intended target population and whether service delivery conforms to program design; impact evaluation to assess the extent the program is effective in meeting its goals within budget and other constraints; and efficiency evaluation, in which results or benefits are judged against costs.

In view of the increasing necessity and significance of evaluation for police agencies, police boards, and the public, the British Columbia Police Commission has developed a series of documents that explore the performance and related issues of police programs, with specific attention to the issues relating to the evaluation of community policing. This document contains a general introduction to the procedures, considerations, and practical benefits for engaging in program monitoring, impact evaluations, and efficiency evaluations. It also reviews the benefits to be gained through committing to evaluation and the ways in which evaluation research can be used in a practical manner by police organizations; examines the common goals of community policing; explores how these goals have been measured; and summarizes current knowledge of the performance of community policing programs.

A Comparison of the French and English versions of the computerized lifestyle assessment instrument

By John R. Weekes, William A. Millson and Susan A. Vanderburg. Ottawa : Correctional Service Canada, Correctional Research & Development, 1995. 14 p. : Bibl. (Research brief / Correctional Service Canada. Research & Statistics Branch ; no. B-09)

The Computerized Lifestyle Assessment Instrument (CLAI) was originally developed in English. When the Correctional Service of Canada adopted the CLAI for offenders, the instrument was translated into French for use with francophone offenders. An important research and operational question is the reliability, validity, and general appropriateness of the translated version of CLAI for administration to French-speaking offenders. This report examines some of these issues by comparing the psychometric structure of the French- and English-language versions of the CLAI, by assessing francophone and anglophone offenders' feedback on their impressions of the instrument, and by examining the nature and characteristics of substance abuse problems for francophone and anglophone offenders. The results indicate the degree of usefulness of the CLAI as a means of accurately identifying substance abuse among offenders regardless of cultural or linguistic background.

Ces rapports représentent la contribution biologique permettant au Conseil de Conservation des Ressources Halieutiques et aux gestionnaires des pêches de fournir des avis sur la conservation et d'établir des plans de gestion de ces ressources exploitées. Les stocks couverts dans ce rapport sont : Hareng du nord du golfe du Saint-Laurent, capelan du Golfe, morue du nord du Golfe, flétan du Groenland du Golfe, flétan atlantique du Golfe, sébaste du Golfe, et enfin maquereau du nord-ouest Atlantique.

Cette étude, qui porte sur tous les cultivars de légumineuses fourragères pérennes recommandés au Québec lors de la mise en route de l'expérience en 1978, compare ces derniers sous les mêmes conditions de sol, de climat et d'exploitation au cours des mêmes années. Elle vise surtout à faire connaître dans les conditions précitées : l'évolution de la composition chimique de quatre légumineuses et de plusieurs de leurs cultivars récoltés à des stades de développement équivalents; les oscillations des constituants organiques et des éléments minéraux dans les cultivars à trois stades de croissance; la comparaison du chimisme des espèces à un même âge physiologique à l'intérieur de chaque cycle; et, la relation entre les cycles de végétation.

Cet examen de la documentation a été préparé à la demande du SCC, dans le cadre de l'initiative concernant les délinquants sous responsabilité fédérale. Il a été conçu pour être d'assez grande envergure et équilibré sur le plan des disciplines traitées et, de plus, pour examiner les programmes particuliers et les méthodes d'évaluation destinées aux femmes délinquantes qui ont agi avec violence. Ce rapport traite d'un certain nombre d'aspects: l'étendue de la violence exercée par des femmes et les différentes formes qu'elle revêt dans la société et le système correctionnel; les problèmes reliés à la compréhension de la violence des femmes; les explications quant aux pourquoi et au comment la violence surgit chez les femmes, selon différentes perspectives; les études particulières de la violence exercée par des femmes; les instruments d'évaluation élaborés spécialement pour mesurer le comportement violent des femmes; les programmes visant ces femmes, qui ont été élaborés et évalués; et, la manière dont ces programmes peuvent être instaurés.

Le simplexe primal adapté au réseau est un algorithme bien connu pour résoudre des problèmes de flot à coût minimum dans un réseau. Cette thèse présente une nouvelle structure de données et introduit une nouvelle heuristique adaptative de choix de pivots modifiant sa stratégie de façon dynamique au cours du processus de résolution. On présente aussi une étude empirique comparant une implantation basée sur ces concepts à une implantation du simplexe réseau reconnue pour son efficacité et à une implantation d'un algorithme de type primal/dual. On développe aussi un algorithme parallèle pour le simplexe réseau primal. Enfin, on aborde le problème des mesures d'efficacité d'algorithmes parallèles et introduit la notion d'accélération potentielle.

This report begins with a review of the objectives of controlled blasting, the five main controlled-blasting or perimeter-control techniques used in mining, and controlled blasting design. It then reports results of controlled blasting experiments conducted at an underground experimental mine in Quebec. The objective of these experiments was to develop suitable controlled blasting techniques for small development headings drilled by jackleg with 32-millimeter bits. The techniques considered needed to maintain the drill-blast-muck cycle achieved in each work shift. The experimentation also aimed to provide insight into blast damage mechanisms in order to formulate criteria for dilution minimization with blast designs in stopes. The experiments used ammonium nitrate fuel oil as the main explosive and tested various smooth blasting techniques and pre-splitting. All blasts were monitored with a multi-channel blast vibration monitor.

This publication describes how Pittsburgh Township, Ontario initiated, implemented, and achieved a permanent 15% reduction in its operating budget in 22 months, with no significant reduction in services or any tax increases. The approach used is called cost management, a comprehensive management philosophy that focuses on permanently and continuously reducing the costs of products, services, and work processes through widespread and active employee involvement. After an introduction on the concept of cost management, the publication recounts the cost management implementation process in the Township, including its organization, communications and education, activities, recognition and rewards for performance, and results. The publication then provides a guide on the basics of cost management, including the role of teamwork, critical success factors, and potential pitfalls. The final section describes cost management techniques and tools, including process mapping, use of performance indicators, and unit costing.

With increasing social pressures to reduce the amount of herbicides used in forestry, cover crops are being evaluated for their use as a forest management tool. This publication summarizes current available information on the use of cover crops to control competing vegetation in forest management. The publication begins with a review of research on cover crops for weed suppression, soil stabilization and nitrogen fixation; on cover crop growth and survival; and on some problems with cover crop use. The publication then outlines considerations for the choice of the appropriate cover crop species and describes some cover crop plants suitable for use in northern Ontario. These include alfalfa, timothy grass, clover, bird's-foot trefoil, and orchard grass.

A Covering tour model for planning mobile health care facilities in Suhum District, Ghana

The problem of providing primary health care in developing countries is that there should be enough facilities to be geographically accessible, yet few enough to be properly stocked and staffed. This problem is exacerbated in seasons when travel is only possible on paved roads. This paper investigates the feasibility of using mobile health care facilities to resolve this dilemma in the Suhum district of Ghana. The paper shows how the problem of minimizing the travel of a mobile facility while ensuring a specified coverage can be formulated and solved as a covering tour problem. The paper includes a formulation of the problem, the algorithms used for solution, a description of the study area, and computational results.

Crisis management within a political environment : a self-learning program for federal public service managers

MICROLOG 96-02425 (2 fiche)

This program is intended as an introduction to the emerging field of crisis management. It was produced to help public service managers develop the basic tools and techniques needed to effectively manage crises within a political environment. Module 1 presents the concept of crisis management, defining it within a political context. It differentiates the three levels of response - emergency response, emergency management and crisis management - and introduces the idea that crises must be planned for. Module 2 examines the life-cycle of a crisis. The Confidence/control model, an analytic tool for recognizing and understanding the stages of a crisis, is presented and discussed. Module 3 is a step-by-step guide to crisis management planning. It outlines practical steps to be taken in preparing for and responding to crises. Module 4 covers the complex subject of crisis communication, from developing a crisis communications plan, to working with the media. Finally, Module 5 brings everything together in a simulated crisis scenario designed to challenge the viewer, and reinforce the principles learned in the first four modules.

Critical shear stresses for erosion and deposition of fine suspended sediments in the Fraser River

By Bomanna G. Krishnappan and P. Engel. North Vancouver, BC : Environment Canada, Environmental Conservation Branch, Science Division, 1994. v, 10 p. : ill., Bibl. On cover: Fraser River Action Plan.
MICROLOG 96-02229 (1 fiche)

Models of cohesive sediment transport require parameters describing the erosion and deposition rate functions which, at present, can only be obtained by measurements in laboratory flumes using site-specific sediments. Conventional straight flumes are not suitable for cohesive sediment studies due to the long time scales required. An alternate approach is to use a rotating circular flume.

This report presents results of circular flume testing on cohesive sediment suspensions obtained from the Fraser River and its tributary the Nechako River near their confluence. The investigators measured sediment concentrations, size distribution of suspended sediment flocs as a function of time, and critical shear stresses for deposition and erosion. They also repeated some tests after known concentrations of a pulp mill effluent were added to examine the effluent effect on the deposition and erosion processes.

A Critique of analytical approaches for full cost accounting

By Craig M. Roessler and Timothy L. McDaniels. Ottawa : Environment Canada, 1994. iv, 91 p. : Bibl. On cover: Fraser River Action Plan. MICROLOG 96-02231 (2 fiche)

This report discusses the complexities of applying analytical tools to represent societal environmental values in full cost accounting (FCA). The purpose of the report is to provide a detailed review and critique of valuation approaches for FCA, framed in the context of wilderness preservation decisions. Two broad categories of value elicitation techniques have been developed in the literature and are considered in the report: those based on the indirect revealed preferences of consumers in markets with related commodities, and those based on the direct expressed preferences of individuals. The report reviews valuation methods within each category, casting the discussion in terms of their potential for informing complex land or water use decisions. The valuation approaches evaluated include contingent valuation, multiattribute utility technology, the travel cost method, and the hedonic price method.

This survey provides an indication of the harvesting systems used in New Brunswick with approximate volumes of wood harvested by these systems for the licensees and sub-licensees entitled to operate on provincial Crown land. The 1992-93 survey was conducted on individual Crown licenses and is based on the harvesting system and volume of wood harvested on an individual block basis as reported in the licensees' 1992-93 annual report. Information provided in the survey includes volumes of wood harvested by each phase of a harvesting system; percentage of softwood and hardwood harvested on provincial Crown land; trends in wood harvested by each phase of a harvesting system over the 1981-92 to 1992-93 operating seasons; and harvested volumes by licensee. The phases of harvesting considered in the survey include felling, delimbing, forwarding, and slashing.

The main objective of the Correctional Service Canada (CSC) Staff Survey was to seek views of employees on a number of important issues such as case management, work environment, harassment, workplace stress, career management, attitudes toward offenders and toward CSC, occupational safety and health, and offender programs. The survey methodology was based on a successful model used by the United States Bureau of Prisons. The survey questionnaire contained about 200 questions, but not all questions were asked of all staff. This report presents and discusses the survey results by each issue category on the questionnaire. Composite scale data are presented by region, job type, and individual worksite. The appendix contains summaries of responses, by gender and by worksite type, to the survey questions.

Cyclostationary spectral analysis of typical Satcom signals using the FFT accumulation method (U)

This paper examines the suitability of cyclostationary spectral analysis for the detection and identification of typical Satcom signals. The paper first presents an overview of the general equations for cyclostationary spectral analysis and derives the cyclic spectrum for some common Satcom modulation schemes. Cyclic spectrum estimation techniques are described with particular emphasis on the time-smoothed approach. The paper then outlines key aspects of a computationally efficient algorithm for computing the cyclic spectrum estimates, called the fast Fourier transform (FFT) accumulation method (FAM). The paper concludes with presentation of experimental results in which the FAM algorithm is implemented on a digital signal processor/personal computer board and used to compute the cyclic spectrum for various phase-shift-keyed and spread-spectrum waveforms.

This report describes this review of research and process technology. It begins with an overview of the characteristics of pulse crops (peas, lentils, chickpeas) that are relevant to processing operations, including seed structure, composition, and physical properties. It then reviews unit operations in pulse processing: cleaning and grading, seed conditioning to promote dehulling, drying, dehulling or shelling, husk separation and grading, and polishing. Machinery such as tangential abrasive dehullers, horizontal abrasive rollers, vertical abrasive dehullers, and mini-mills is described. The report ends with a dis-

A chronological record of fires that caused basal scarring is preserved in the remnant white pine (Pinus strobus L.) stumps, estimated to be 135 years old, in a red oak (Quercus rubra L.)/white pine forest near Bracebridge, Ontario. A historical review of fire in oak-dominated forests can provide a basis for development of silvicultural prescriptions that use prescribed burning to regenerate northern red oak. This paper describes a study conducted to develop a dendrochronological methodology for determining pre-European fire history in the white pine region of Ontario, and to document the fire regime in the oak/pine forest. The investigators dated fire scars on the white pine stumps and constructed a composite fire scar chronology between 1664 and 1852. The paper notes the mean fire-free interval for four divisions of the 1664-1852 period and discusses human influences on fire history. FO ON PR SC

Hay exporters must ensure that hay products are free from the Hessian fly (Mayetiola destructor). Previous work on chopped hay has shown that exposure of the material to 60 degrees C for at least three minutes destroys the fly's pupae stage. This document describes tests on baled hay which were artificially infested with Hessian flies and then heat treated at 60 degrees C. The investigators embedded nine lots of about 6000 fly puparia each into bales of alfalfa (Medicago sativa L.), six of which were exposed to forced air heating and three (the control bales) ventilated with unheated air. Following the heat treatment, the bales were incubated for 75 days for insect emergence. The results presented compare the insect emergence from the heat treated bales to emergence from the untreated bales.

Information presented in this paper describes sediment-discharge relations from the first two years of the pre-forestry phase of a multi-year, multidisciplinary fishery/forestry interaction project. The sediment data are to be used to assess sediment modelling with respect to the estimation of pre-forestry sediment budgets, the sampling procedure, and baseline data characteristics in order to improve measurement methodology and data quality in the future. The study area comprised three watersheds in the Takla Lake region of British Columbia, where hydrology is dominated by a snowmelt peak followed by summer and fall low flows when salmon spawning occurs. Fine lacustrine soils are extensive throughout the region and much of the sediment moved by tributaries is likely transported in suspension. Results presented include streamflow and suspended sediment levels, sediment rating curves, and correlations with spawning periods.

The feeding of young coho salmon is fairly diverse, reflecting changes in food supply; there are also qualitative and quantitative differences in food consumed by the different age groups of coho salmon. This paper describes results of a coho salmon feeding study carried out in a major spawning and foraging lake for coho in the Kamchatka River basin. The lake is 62.5 square kilometers in area and young coho live in the lake for up to three years prior to migration. The investigators examined 137 specimens, caught every 3-4 hours, for their stomach contents. The results presented include the feeding patterns for underyearlings, yearlings, and second- and third-year coho, the prevalence of certain types of food in coho stomachs at certain times of day or night, and the degree of stomach fullness at different hours.

This report describes a project that evaluated the potential of ultrasonics for inspection of thin plate used in surface ships, compared to radiographic methods. The investigators used the Canadian Forces APMUS ultrasonic system to inspect 21 welded plates ranging in thickness from 6 to 15 millimeters and provided preliminary classifications of the defects using pattern recognition methods. They assessed the effectiveness of the ultrasonic and radiographic testing methods by rating the ability of the method to detect defects and the manner in which the defects are indicated. Results were compared to determine the relative equivalency of the methods in detecting certain defects or all defects.

Drift composition and glacial dispersal trains, Baker Lake area, District of Keewatin, Northwest Territories

By R.A. Klassen. Ottawa : Energy, Mines & Resources Canada, Geological Survey of Canada, 1995. 68 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. (Bulletin / Geological Survey of Canada : 485) ISBN 0-660-16087-0 CCG-P no. M42-485E

In the District of Keewatin, glacial dispersal trains defined by lithology and geochemistry can be mapped at regional, local, and detailed scales. The trains reflect glacial dynamics and the bedrock composition. This report investigates the glacial dispersal trains in the area of Baker Lake, inshore from northwestern Hudson Bay. It reviews the study area's physiography, vegetation, bedrock and Quaternary geology, and glacial history; describes the study methods used, including till sampling, drill core examination, and geochemical and lithological analyses; and presents and discusses the study results. These results include till geochemistry and pebble lithology at regional and local scale, detailed glacial dispersal patterns at the Kazan River and Bissett Lake sites, and subsurface compositional variations. The implications of the results for mineral exploration based on drift prospecting are discussed.

By Peter H. Pearse and Janna Jessee. Ottawa : Environment Canada, 1994. i, 50 p. : Bibl. On cover: Fraser River Action Plan. MICROLOG 96-02227 (1 fiche)

This study explores the practical opportunities and implications of invoking economic instruments and related institutional changes in support of integrated, sustainable development of forests in British Columbia, consistent with declared public policy objectives. The study begins with an examination of the relationship between economic behavior and the framework of law and institutions within which economic activity takes place. It then reviews economic instruments suitable for forest management, including property rights, pricing, taxes and subsidies, and compliance incentives; and potential economic instruments to support sustainable development of forest resources such as timber, water, fish, wildlife, rangeland, and recreational resources. The study ends with a discussion of aspects of institutional structure that influence the efficiency of economic instruments and a list of recommended research priorities.

This report describes the economic and institutional factors affecting the interaction between agricultural land use and wildlife habitat in the lower Fraser River estuary. An objective of the report is to consider the effectiveness of the current mixture of market and management institutions in meeting the changing demands of the community for wildlife habitat. The first chapter introduces the context of the problem and the economic concept of externality, concluding with a discussion of the nature, form, and importance of compensated land use as central to an effective solution to the current conflict. Chapter 2 details the role of landscape in wildlife abundance and highlights implications of the contemporary production environment of agriculture. The final chapters discuss economic instruments and strategies for habitat conservancy, the role of land use regulation, and the potential of implementing an economic instrumental approach to land use management.

The purpose of this report is to assess the relative costs of different urban form alternatives for accommodating anticipated growth in the Greater Toronto Area (GTA). It reviews various studies that have assessed the cost of alternative development patterns and considers the following key questions: the cost-effectiveness of certain urban development patterns; the urban form factors that influence cost, and the levels of savings achievable; who benefits from more efficient patterns of development; whether there are subsidies to low-density urban fringe growth; and what should be done to accommodate future growth in the GTA. The paper concludes with a discussion of urban growth policy options and possible actions to reduce urban infrastructure costs, remove regulatory obstacles and market distortions, and implement a regional development approach for the GTA.

This paper investigates the production of large, whole giant sea scallops and meats in suspension culture using pearl nets and lantern nets, and describes the effect of varying initial stocking density on growth and survival during final growout to market size. The investigators reared the scallops (Placopecten magellanicus) at five different stocking densities at a shellfish farm at Notre Dame Bay, Newfoundland. Significant relationships are reported among mean shell height, total weight, meat weight, and stocking density and gear type. The report discusses the practical implications of the growth and survival results for commercial farm practices related to stocking densities, gear type selection, stock thinning, and labor costs, for the production of large, whole scallops, meats, and meat with roe products.

Of the chemical compounds which are measured to assess fish spoilage, total volatile basic nitrogen (TVN, TVBN) and triethylamine (TMA) are the most common. Both TVN and TMA values have been reported to vary markedly, depending on the analytical method used. This study was undertaken to compare the commonly used methods for determining the levels of TVN and TMA during fish spoilage. The test material was previously frozen whole ripe male Pacific herring destined for fish meal production. The analytical methods included microdiffusion with potassium carbonate or hydroxide and steam distillation with sodium hydroxide for both TVN and TMA, with direct distillation with magnesium oxide being used for TVN.

The experiments tested canola taproot penetration in seven soils at three bulk densities and three moisture tensions. A cone penetrometer measured the mechanical impedance. Moisture-density relationships (Proctor test) and the plastic Atterberg limit were measured on the same Alberta soils to develop guidelines for preventing soil compaction. The moisture-density curves also aided in determining which types of soil horizons were the most susceptible to compaction.

In summer 1981, after a history of ice jamming and flooding at the village of Debert, Nova Scotia, a section of the Debert River was straightened, widened, and deepened for flood protection purposes. Prior to dredging, that section of the river was typical of good quality Atlantic salmon habitat. This report describes a study in which artificial Atlantic salmon redds (spawning areas) were constructed at potential spawning sites in dredged and adjoining undredged areas of the river. Investigators stocked each redd with newly fertilized Atlantic salmon eggs and determined fry emergence success and timing from 1981 to 1985. They collected supporting information to explain some of the observed difference between fry emergence and juvenile salmon abundance in undredged and dredged areas. This information included counts of natural salmon redds, determination of gravel permeability and sand concentrations in artificial redds, and streambed degradation or aggradation.

This study presents an emission trading plan for stationary sources of nitrogen oxides (NOx) in the Ontario portion of the Windsor-Quebec corridor and assesses the likely costs and benefits of such a plan. The study begins with background information on the emissions trading concept, experience with emissions trading in the United States, and Canadian initiatives. The study then summarizes the basic trading plan and describes the development of the cost and emission database needed to estimate the costs of alternative regulatory strategies. The next chapter uses the database to estimate the savings that could be achieved using emission trading instead of traditional command and control strategies. Subsequent chapters examine the likely performance of the plan in terms of certainty in reducing emissions and improving air quality, address ways in which the basic plan could be refined or extended, and discuss alternative approaches to setting the overall emissions cap and to allocating it among plan participants.

Employment systems review : final report to the Deputy Minister

British Columbia. Employment Systems Review Task Force. Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks ; Ministry Responsible for Multiculturalism & Human Rights, 1995. x, 166 p.
MICROLOG 96-02144 (2 fiche)

This report presents the results of an employment systems review pilot project conducted at two British Columbia ministries in order to identify barriers which unfairly restrict or inhibit employment, advancement, training, or retention and to make recommendations for the removal of those barriers. The project included a review of the government-wide personnel and management systems, a survey of pilot area staff, interviews with supervisory and non-supervisory staff, and a series of focus group sessions initiated to identify solutions and make recommendations on eliminating barriers. The results are presented in the following areas: recruitment and promotion; internal staffing; and working environment/organizational structure. The appendices include the questionnaires used in the workforce profile analysis and employee survey, document review checklists, interview guidelines and questions, and interview analysis methodology.

Ce livre trace le profil de scientifiques et d'universitaires du monde entier qui sont à l'avant-garde de la recherche au service du développement international. Ces femmes et ces hommes ne sont qu'un petit échantillon de la foule de chercheurs que le Centre de recherches pour le développement international (CRDI) a subventionnés au cours de ses 25 années d'existence. L'échantillon représente toutes les régions géographiques du monde : Bénin et Afrique du Sud, Philippines, Sri Lanka et Viet Nam, Chili et Jamaïque, et, bien sûr, le Canada; il représente aussi quelques-unes des disciplines auxquelles le CRDI s'est intéressé : environnement, santé et médecine, politique sociale et économique, sciences de l'information, agriculture et technologie. Le livre fait découvrir des personnes remarquables qui ont connu le succès. Elles se racontent et se révèlent elles-mêmes, évoquant des souvenirs personnels qui séduiront et toucheront... Les anecdotes entourant leur vie professionnelle permettent de mesurer le caractère extraordinaire de leurs réalisations, vu les conditions difficiles qui sont habituellement celles des chercheurs travaillant dans le Sud.

The purpose of this booklet is to help users of refrigeration systems understand how those systems work and how to cut their cost of operation. The booklet begins with a description of the basics of a typical commercial refrigeration system and its main components. It then reviews the characteristics of refrigerants, current regulations regarding refrigerants and future refrigerant options given the phasing out of chlorofluorocarbons, the types of refrigeration systems, and refrigeration problems along with their implications for energy consumption. The booklet ends with an outline of some cost-saving opportunities, including system maintenance and monitoring, inexpensive control and operational measures, and retrofit possibilities.

The Madawaska-Victoria Solid Waste Management Provisional Committee plans to develop a solid waste management regional service designed to receive all the solid waste of the region from Conrors to Drummond, northern New Brunswick. It is also probable that the proposed waste facilities will receive wastes from adjacent localities in Maine and New Brunswick. This report constitutes the environmental impact assessment of Site 75, selected as the facility site through previous studies 1993-94. Sections of the report cover the following topics: project justification and alternative waste management solutions; project description, including development procedures, operation, and site closure; biophysical setting of Site 75; the socio-economic setting of the region; the methodology used to identify impacts; the identified biophysical and socio-economic impacts; and mitigation, emergency plans, residual impacts, and monitoring. The appendices include site selection criteria, leachate quality information, geologic and biophysical data from the site, and operational forecasts.

An Environmental review of the Nigadoo Mines tailings impoundment

By Deborah Arnold. Fredericton : Natural Resources & Energy, Minerals & Energy, 1995. ix, 106 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. (Open file report / New Brunswick. Minerals & Energy Division ; 95-7 ISSN 1198-0648) ISBN 1-55137-660-1
MICROLOG 96-02712 (2 fiche)

The Nigadoo Mine is an abandoned lead-zinc-silver-copper mine located in northern New Brunswick. The mine generated about 1.9 million tons of tailings deposited in an impoundment. The mining company reclaimed the tailings to the satisfaction of the provincial government in 1986, and the province assumed liability for the site. Since 1986, the site has deteriorated and there is concern that the 14.5 hectares of tailings may be acid-generating and affecting local groundwater. This report is an environmental review of the tailings impoundment to determine the acid drainage potential, possible solutions to a problem with dust from the impoundment, and the possibility of reprocessing the tailings. Boreholes in conductivity anomalies identified in an electromagnetic survey were sampled and analyzed, and five of these were used to monitor water chemistry. Flotation tests were used to assess the feasibility of tailings reprocessing. The report concludes with recommendations regarding mitigative measures and further research. Appendices contain test and analytical data.

This report summarizes the health hazards of environmental tobacco smoke and tobacco smoking, as well as their health effects, and makes recommendations to Saskatoon City Council to amend the city's tobacco smoking bylaw (Bylaw No. 6116) in order to reduce public exposure to environmental tobacco smoke. The report also reviews results of a telephone survey of Saskatoon residents regarding the proposed bylaw and issues related to smoking bylaws (health issues versus smokers' rights, bylaw effects on business, liabilities, ventilation of buildings, enforcement). Finally, the report outlines a plan for phased-in implementation of the bylaw and educating the general public and business proprietors about the bylaw. The appendices include a copy of the bylaw, results of a Saskatoon smoking survey, and letters of support for the bylaw from community associations.

MICROLOG 96-02445 (2 fiche)

Equity in Learning Media recognizes that bias in learning media influences how learners see themselves and has an impact on their academic achievement and learning. Learning media that are biased and discriminatory adversely affect all learners, especially those from communities which are marginalized in the society. This document addresses the needs of all learners taking into account the characteristics that define identities; for example, race, ethnocultural identity, gender, age, faith, physical and developmental disabilities, socio-economic status, place of origins, language and sexual orientation. The purpose is to promote the principles of equity in education in the development, selection and use of learning media; provide publishers, authors, editors, artists, administrators, curriculum writers, evaluators and teachers with criteria for equity in education to guide the development, selection and use of learning media; ensure that the experiences of all learners be incorporated into learning media as sources of information, and as resources in the development of critical thinking; ensure effective partnerships with members of educational communities and educators in the process of identifying critical issues pertaining to the development, selection and use of learning media.

Estimation of target angular position under mainbeam jamming conditions (U)

By Mylène Toulgoat and Ross M. Turner. Ottawa : National Defence, Defence Research Establishment Ottawa, 1995. xii, 52 p. : ill., Bibl. (Report / Defence Research Establishment Ottawa ; no. 1281)
MICROLOG 96-02687 (1 fiche)

A phased-array multifunction radar with an agile pencil beam will invariably employ a monopulse system for precise angle measurement. Such a system has three receiver channels. This report considers a modest expansion of the number of receiving channels from three to five channels, comprising the sum channel beamformer and each half of the two difference beamformers. These form an adaptive array which can be used to provide mainbeam nulling of jammers. The report applies a new algorithmic approach to mainbeam jammer nulling and target angle estimation to this new five-element adaptive array. With this algorithm, the jammer subspace is first evaluated by sampling at ranges where the target is absent. Data vectors are then processed to remove the jammer, allowing target detection. Finally, a high resolution technique is used to estimate target direction of arrival. The report evaluates the performance of the algorithm through simulations and compares it with corrected adaptive monopulse for a typical X-band phased array.

A Rotman lens is a bidirectional electrical lens which, together with an array antenna, is capable of generating a discrete number of radiated beams simultaneously, each having a predefined direction in space. This report describes a project that designed, constructed, and tested Rotman lenses for a proposed space-based radar facility. The five Rotman lenses manufactured for the project were found to have unsatisfactory performance, and the report details the ultrasonic and x-ray inspection of the lenses, the metallographic inspection of one of the lenses which was sectioned to confirm the results of the ultrasonic inspection, and the electrical evaluation of the lenses that used a two transmission line method to measure their effective permittivity. The report also discusses the physical mechanisms that could have affected lens performance and the usefulness of ultrasonic inspection for testing microwave stripline circuits.

This report describes an application of tandem mass spectrometry (MS/MS) for the study of very small volumes of biofilm from riverine environments. The investigators used conventional liquid/liquid extractions (500-milliliter samples) with gas chromatography/mass spectrometry detection to obtain a fingerprint of organic contaminants present in pulp and paper mill effluent. They compared these fingerprints with MS/MS data from small-volume (2 microliter) samples of biofilm exposed to effluent from the same mill. The preliminary results obtained provide an indication of the selectivity and sensitivity of MS/MS product-ion scans for identifying classes of contaminants from pulp mill effluents in small quantities of biofilm.

Fate of volatile organic compounds in wastewater collection systems, volumes I-III

Volatile organic compounds (VOCs) are organic chemicals used in a wide variety of applications including cleaners, fuel additives, and solvents. They easily volatilize from water to air and can enter municipal wastewater systems from such sources as industries, public institutions, and households. Concerns surrounding the presence of VOCs in wastewater include sludge contamination, bioreactor upsets, explosion hazard, and toxicity. This report aims to improve the base of knowledge associated with the fate of VOCs in wastewater collection systems. It reports results of experiments conducted to investigate formation of chlorinated VOCs, biodegradation of VOCs, and gas-liquid mass transfer in sewers. It also includes a literature review and a study of VOC emissions from municipal sewers.

The study provides the background information used to justify the implementation of and specific design for extensive field studies which have been conducted in Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Quebec. The study also reports preliminary findings from a 1989 Ontario field investigation related to the effects of the use of chemical pesticides and/or fertilizers on the number and variety of farmland birds.

For regulation to be sensitive to the needs of Canadians it is critical that interested parties make government departments and agencies aware of their concerns about regulations before they become law. This plan provides the public with an early opportunity to participate in the regulatory process. It lists possible initiatives identified by departments and administrative or independent regulatory agencies giving a detailed description of each regulatory amendment with contact person. It includes a section giving a brief progress report on initiatives included in the previous plan.

Le présent document décrit de façon détaillée le mode de financement de l'éducation en Ontario en 1995, y compris les rôles et responsabilités du gouvernement provincial et des conseils scolaires. Comme ce fut le cas en 1994, la description du modèle de financement de l'éducation en Ontario et le Règlement sur les subventions générales font, cette année encore, l'objet de publications distinctes. Le Règlement sur les subventions générales indique les dispositions législatives qui régissent la répartition des subventions entre les conseils scolaires. Présente 5 catégories de financement: subvention de base par élève; subventions au titre de circonstances particulières; subventions au titre de programmes particuliers; subventions d'immobilisations; et autres subventions provinciales destinées à l'éducation.

The purpose of this study is to provide a general overview of the financial services industry in New England for Canadians interested in exporting to or entering that market. The study begins with a review of the three segments of the industry (depository institutions, contractual saving institutions, and investment intermediaries), their growth and competition, and industry structure. It then discusses the strengths of financial services suppliers and buyers, the barriers to market entry, channels of distribution, and applicable regulations. The study concludes with recommendations regarding niche markets that are potentially suitable for penetration by Canadian financial service companies. The appendix contains an annotated directory of financial service associations and regulatory bodies in the United States and a directory of financial service companies in New England, arranged by state (except Connecticut).

The document should be used in conjunction with other Board documents and procedures including the Child Abuse Support document and relevant Board policies. The emphasis in this resource document is on responding effectively to unacceptable student behaviour. Curriculum resource documents and the Student Services handbook should be consulted for strategies and procedures which are more preventative in nature. The procedures provided in this document are intended for use with students at all levels (JK-OAC). Administrators of Continuing and Alternative Education are expected to adapt the document as appropriate. This resource document encourages the early use of preventative strategies whenever possible, rather than responding primarily in a more reactive manner.

The main objective of this manual is to summarize and present existing habitat information for forest-dependent birds, mammals, and reptiles in northeastern Ontario within a format recognized and used by forest managers. The habitat information is presented as a matrix indicating the suitability of 16 different types of forest habitats, each with five stages of development, for forest-dependent species (excluding certain birds and mammals that are closely associated with riparian and aquatic ecosystems). The manual includes a description of the forest habitat types and selected bibliographic references to the literature on habitat for the species included in the matrix.

This document establishes a planning framework for British Columbia that will permit the undertaking of health human resources planning (HHRP), the process of estimating the number of persons and kind of knowledge, skills and attitudes they need to achieve predetermined health targets and health status. The document outlines the current policy directions and guiding principles related to HHRP and also identifies nine goals which define a framework for achieving a common mission and objectively assessing progress toward objectives. The document then sets out an action plan that seeks to identify priority actions for HHRP which are integrated, collaborative, cost-effective, dynamic, and goal-driven. The appendices include an outline of approaches to HHRP, a review of the current organization of HHRP and related activities within government, an inventory of current health care personnel classifications, and a long-range planning model.

In August 1992, the Saskatchewan government consolidated and reorganized the basic governance structures within the province's existing health system. As a result, the basic accountability relationships within the system have also changed. The purpose of this paper is to define these relationships, particularly those between the Minister of Health (and the Department of Health as the Minister's agent) and the district health boards. The paper defines accountability and illustrates a conceptual framework for accountability. It then outlines the Ministry/district health board accountability framework, discussing the establishment of expectations and responsibilities, measurement progress toward meeting those expectations, and review of the information and reports obtained in the measurement stage. The paper concludes with a discussion of means of strengthening the accountability framework through third parties.

P-GMA welds were designed to provide optimum weld performance in terms of both the operating characteristics and resultant mechanical properties, while the SA welds were made to assess the effects of chemical composition and energy input. The investigators evaluated the welds using targeted mechanical property requirements that combine both high yield strength and good low-temperature toughness. Results presented include weld metal chemical composition, weld metal mechanical properties, and weld metal microstructure and hardness.

Ce programme sert d'introduction au domaine en pleine croissance de la gestion des crises. On l'a réalisé afin d'aider les gestionnaires du gouvernement à acquérir les outils de base et les techniques qu'il leur faut pour gérer efficacement les crises dans un contexte politique. Le Module 1 expose le concept de la gestion des crises dans un contexte politique. Il définit trois paliers d'intervention : l'intervention d'urgence, la gestion des situations d'urgence et la gestion des crises; et il présente le concept selon lequel il faut planifier en vue des crises. Le Module 2 porte sur les étapes d'une crise. On y présente le modèle de la confiance et du contrôle, un outil d'analyse qui permet d'identifier et de comprendre les étapes d'une crise. Le Module 3 est un guide étape par étape de planification de la gestion des crises. Il expose les étapes pratiques à suivre avant et pendant une crise. Le Module 4 porte sur le sujet complexe des communications pendant une crise de l'élaboration d'un plan de communications en cas de crise jusqu'aux relations avec les médias. Enfin, le Module 5 fait la synthèse de tous ces éléments en présentant une crise simulée élaborée de manière à stimuler l'auditoire et à renforcer l'apprentissage des concepts présentés dans les quatre premiers modules.

The initial approach involved helping girls improve their spatial skills and extend their science and technology experiences. As a result of discussion with one of the participants, this approach later changed to one which helped girls to view reality differently, and in which the concepts of science, technology and female were directly linked. The new approach used female role models who were confident problem solvers and who readily took risks and accepted challenges.

The authors of papers in this volume are attempting to answer the question of what is the optimum set of labor market policies that will maximize the number of good jobs, given the tradeoffs involved. The first paper argues for a move away from an adversarial style of industrial relations to a social partnership approach. The second discusses the expansion of nonstandard employment and nontraditional management systems as a means of increasing the ability of management to adjust labor costs to market demand. The third paper defends the case for judicial activism to promote pay equity and employment equity. The volume ends with commentaries on the three papers from the viewpoints of a senior corporate executive and a former union economist.

The Global Positioning System (GPS) is being increasingly used for georeferencing in geographic information systems (GISs). This paper addresses an essential consideration for ensuring the integrity of positions entered into a GIS. It explains the significance of the GPS coordinate system and how large positional errors in a GIS may be avoided through careful attention to coordinate systems. Three positioning techniques suitable for many GISs are discussed and compared: single-point positioning, differential positioning, and single-point positioning with precise orbits and clocks. Finally, the paper offers a few suggestions for novice GPS users.

The introduction of selective availability has degraded the precision attainable using the Global Positioning System (GPS) at a single epoch with a single receiver to about 100 meters. This paper proposes a method using precise satellite orbits and clocks for GPS point positioning. The method involves the use of data from Natural Resources Canada's Geodetic Survey Division with respect to precise GPS satellite orbits and clocks, from which higher frequency satellite clocks are computed from the Canadian Active Control System. These data products can be included in a point positioning software interface and provide high precision to users operating a single GPS receiver. With the use of quality receivers, this relatively simple approach can offer precision of one meter or better and satisfy a wide range of spatial referencing requirements.

Slope stability is of major concern in permafrost regions, since ground warming can induce permafrost thaw and surface subsidence. To guard against ground warming in areas along the Norman Wells pipeline underlain by permafrost, 56 slopes along the pipeline route were covered with wood chips as insulation. To augment thermal monitoring of the woodchip slopes, initially restricted to manual probing and recording of borehole temperatures, investigators conducted ground penetrating radar surveys along portions of the route. This report summarizes surveys conducted during 1994, along with a preliminary interpretation of results and outlines of thaw patterns observed. The bulk of the report consists of the actual radar profiles.

Fish processing is a major industry in British Columbia and the liquid wastes from such production constitute a significant load to either sewage treatment systems or surface waters. This document provides a comprehensive review of the best processing technologies, treatment technologies, and wastewater management options for fish processing operations in the province, and outlines the feasibility of process improvements, water conservation, byproduct recovery, and wastewater treatment. The document begins with background information on the province's fish processing industry and the regulations governing fish processing waste. It then reviews the water consumption and wastewater characteristics of fish processing facilities; the technology used for processing various types of fish and shellfish; and water/wastewater treatment and minimization practices. An economic analysis of processing technology improvements includes a case study of a hypothetical fish processing plant.

A community health needs assessment is one activity which First Nation communities can undertake to help prepare for the transfer of their community health services to their own First Nation Health Authority. This manual has been prepared to assist those communities to prepare a health needs assessment, a process for recording and understanding the health needs of all individuals of a community. The manual is constructed in the form of guidelines for the four phases of a health needs assessment (management plan, assessment preparation, assessment implementation, and final report preparation). Each phase is described in terms of its objective, the tasks needed to complete the phase, the resulting product, time and labor needed, and costs. The manual also includes an interviewer's guide and sample health survey questionnaires.

This paper reports accurate molecular weight data for a series of 37 unknown synthetic peptides used in research studies involving synthetic vaccines, antibacterial peptides, or the de-novo design of helical peptides and proteins. The investigators obtained all data using a magnetic sector instrument with external calibration over a wide mass range during magnetic scanning. Errors between observed and theoretical monoisotopic molecular weights were typically in the 5-60 parts per million range, and isotopic clusters for charge states up to +10 were resolved through the use of high sector resolution. Collisional activated dissociation in the electrospray interface afforded production of product ions that enabled either full or partial sequencing of most unknown peptides below 2000 Daltons. The research reported is part of a program to develop new techniques for identifying and confirming of toxins and biological warfare agents.

Hydrodynamic analysis and design criteria of sucker rod pump valves operating at inclined angles

This report summarizes research conducted to investigate the hydrodynamic characteristics of different rod pump valve designs at inclined angles, under both steady- and variable-flow regimes. The researchers performed 81 tests on different valve designs and ball sizes at inclined angles with different fluid viscosities to understand how those factors would affect pump efficiency. They also reconstructed valve cages of plexiglas for direct visual observation and video recording of ball dynamics. A drag coefficient-Reynolds number characteristic was used to indicate whether a particular valve design or valve-ball combination would not operate efficiently at inclined angles. The bulk of the report consists of data from the tests performed in a pressure drop flow loop apparatus.

The investigators employed a new hydrodynamic test loop that was instrumented and used to assess essential flow characteristics of 19 valve designs at steady pump rates up to 400 cubic meters per day and at fluid viscosities up to 100 centipoises. The report proposes the use of measured static head loss for assessing the potential risk of flashing occurring in the pump valve, and the use of a dimensionless valve characteristic to describe valve hydrodynamics. The bulk of the report consists of test data.

The Canadian Forces are interested in developing an air-deployable acoustic sensor system, analogous to the sonobuoy, for use in ice-covered Arctic waters. This report presents results of 1994 trials of the Icebuoy, which is parachuted onto sea ice and expels a geophone sensor on sensing impact with the ice. The geophone is coated with a thermochemical that melts through the snow cover and part of the ice, after which the ice freezes and physically couples the geophone to the ice. A radio transmitter relays the acoustic data from the geophone back to the aircraft. The main objective of the 1994 trials was to investigate the ice-geophone coupling achieved by the Icebuoy deployment procedure and its effects on sensor performance in terms of sensitivity and fidelity. A second area of investigation involved a study of the effects of different snow and ice conditions on sensor performance. Results are included for an ice-pan test site and a ridge test site.

This report describes the results of a study of the effects of the Cognitive Skills Training program on post-release outcomes of federal offenders. The program focuses on faulty thinking patterns that typify the haphazard strategies offenders employ to make life decisions, solve minor problems, and react to immediate situations in their environments. The program is cognitive-behavioral in style and combines didactic methods of teaching cognitive skills with guided exercises for practicing the skills. The study is based on a sample of 4,072 offenders who completed the program or who were referred and considered eligible for the program between 1990 and 1994. Offenders on waiting lists were used as a control group. The results compare recidivism rates (after one year follow-up) between program completers and the control group. Outcomes are evaluated by such factors as type of release, risk level, aboriginal status, program delivery setting, and proximity of release to program completion.

In the matter of live swine from Canada

Ottawa : NAFTA Secretariat, 1995. 21 p. CCG-P no. E100-2/2-94-1904-01E MICROLOG 96-02121 (1 fiche)

This document reviews the final results of the sixth annual review by the United States Department of Commerce under its countervailing duty order on live swine from Canada. The petitioners challenge the Department's denial of separate treatment for the oldest and heaviest swine (sows and boars) and for a category of young, light swine (weanlings) covered by the order. In all prior reviews for which separate rates have been calculated, the Department found that these categories of swine received zero or de-minimis subsidies under the Canadian programs being countervailed. The document considers the standard of review, the positions of the petitioners and the Department, the possible reasons for the revocation of the sows and boars subclass, and the appropriateness of the denial of a subclass for weanlings. The document concludes with its findings and directions to the Department of Commerce.

L'incidence du Programme d'apprentissage cognitif des compétences sur la récidive après la mise en liberté chez les délinquants sous responsabilité fédérale au Canada

Ce rapport expose les conclusions d'une étude des effets du Programme d'apprentissage cognitif des compétences concernant les résultats obtenus par les délinquants sous responsabilité fédérale au Canada après leur mise en liberté. On y trouvera une comparaison des taux de réincarcération et de nouvelles condamnations établis pour un échantillon de participants au programme et ceux des délinquants mis en liberté inscrits de façon aléatoire sur une liste d'attente mais qui n'ont jamais participé au programme. Le rapport expose en détail les incidences différentielles du programme sur des délinquants présentant diverses caractéristiques, y compris différents types de mise en liberté, niveaux de risque, types d'infraction et variables démographiques. Cette étude est l'une des plus importantes études aux résultats contrôlés ayant pour but d'évaluer les effets des interventions correctionnelles chez les délinquants qui ont purgé une peine d'emprisonnement. Les résultats permettent d'être relativement optimistes quant à l'efficacité du Programme d'apprentissage cognitif des compétences comme moyen de réduction du taux de récidive de ce groupe de délinquants qui présentent généralement un risque élevé.

The Incidence of family violence perpetrated by federal offenders : a file review study

Ottawa : Correctional Service Canada, Correctional Programs, Research & Statistics, 1995. vii, 71 p. : ill., Bibl. (Research report / Correctional Service Canada. Research & Statistics Branch ; no. FV-03) On cover: Family violence initiative. French ed. (La Violence familiale chez...) : 96-02505/1. MICROLOG 96-02504 (1 fiche)

This study examines the nature and extent of incidences of family violence among federal offenders. The investigators selected a file review methodology as the most efficient strategy for this initial national study of the issue. They reviewed 935 institutional files of men admitted to Correctional Service of Canada institutions during 1992. The files were randomly selected and stratified by region to ensure that smaller regions were well-represented. This report presents results and discussion regarding the offenders' perpetration of violence against family members, female partners, and children; regional variations in perpetration of abuse; rate of perpetration among those of Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal status; participation in family violence treatment programs; and correlates of family violence, notably the childhood victimization of offenders by family members. The appendix includes a copy of the file review instrument.

This review examines the American and Canadian educational research and program literature related to the inclusion of adults with an intellectual disability in the post-secondary community college system and adult vocational training systems. The overall goal of the review is to identify the factors that contribute to effective integration. Issues examined in the review include participation levels, impact of lack of access, barriers to participation, and success factors leading to the effective inclusion of people with intellectual disabilities in post-secondary education and training. It also describes a number of model programs that have been identified in the research. Research themes fall into such categories as services, support or programming for certain populations; transition into and out of post-secondary education; and options for services.

This report describes a deer hunter survey conducted to determine whether the value of wildlife-based recreation in the Fundy Model Forest could be increased, and to examine hunter preferences and attitudes. The survey method involved a random mail questionnaire sent to 5,500 hunters who purchased deer hunting licenses in New Brunswick in 1994. Responses were received from 608 Fundy Model Forest hunters and 1,295 hunters who hunted outside the Model Forest area. The report presents survey results in the following categories: general characteristics of the hunters, their activities and expenditures, and how much more they would pay to hunt deer; the factors perceived to affect the quality of deer hunting in the Model Forest; the factors affecting deer hunting that can be controlled; and the total value of deer hunting and its distribution in the Model Forest area. The report ends with a review of possible policies that could increase the value of deer hunting.

MICROLOG 96-02732 (1 fiche)

In 1899, the Treaty 8 Commission negotiated a treaty with the Cree and Chipewyan Indians of Fort McMurray. In 1994, the Fort McKay First Nation asked the Indian Claims Commission to review this matter since the Canadian government and the First Nation (descendants of the Fort McMurray Chipewyan) have been unable to agree on the interpretation of the treaty's formula for calculating land entitlements. This report summarizes an inquiry into Canada's Treaty 8 obligations with respect to those entitlements. It begins with a background on claim area, the First Nations involved, the treaty, the land entitlements, post-treaty administration in the Athabasca region, a 1915 survey of reserves in the region, post-1915 additions to the Fort McKay band, and the Fort McKay First Nation claim. The report then discusses issues considered at the inquiry and analyzes those issues with regard to such matters as collective versus individual rights, how to count band adherents, fiduciary duties, and treaty obligations. The appendix contains historical research guidelines for treaty land entitlement claims.

The central nervous system stimulants dexfenfluramine and phentermine, either alone or in combination, are susceptible of stimulating thermogenesis and therefore liable to improve cold tolerance. The present study investigates the mechanisms underlying the respective or interactive effects of dexfenfluramine and phentermine on metabolic rate and cold tolerance in rats. This paper describes six series of experiments carried out to: determine the effects of various doses of the two stimulants on oxygen consumption, respiratory quotient, cold tolerance, sympathetic nervous system activity, and food intake; the role of dopaminergic, serotonergic and noradrenergic mechanisms in the effects of the stimulants on oxygen consumption and respiratory quotient; and the role of the dopaminergic and serotonergic mechanisms in the effects of the stimulants on cold tolerance.

International financial institutions (IFIs), including the World Bank Group and the regional development banks, have been the largest source of finance for economic development in over 100 low-to middle-income countries. IFIs are assuming new roles as guarantors and co-financiers, and offer a doorway into the next century's fastest growing markets. This report analyzes Canada's contributions to IFIs and the procurement of IFI-funded contracts by Canadian firms, 1991-94, and estimates the potential for Canadian firms to increase their share of the IFI market. It reviews the roles of the private sector and government in IFI-financed projects and contracts, describes the IFI project/operating cycle, and makes recommendations on strategic actions to increase Canadian IFI procurement. The report includes suggested priorities for IFI procurement in the fields of energy, environment, telecommunications, transport, and health.

In this paper we use administrative data associated with the tax system to: 1) document the extent of intergenerational income mobility among Canadian men; and 2) estimate the income disadvantage (in adulthood) of being raised in a low income household. We find that there is considerable intergenerational income mobility in Canada among middle income earners, but that the inheritance of economic status is significant at both the very top and very bottom of the income distribution. About one-third of those in the bottom quartile were raised by fathers who occupied the same position in the income distribution. In fact, the income advantage of someone who had a father in the top decile over someone who had a father in the bottom decile is in the order of 40%. We also discuss some of the policy implications of these findings, as well as some of their limitations and the directions implied for future research.

The first section of the paper examines how the lives of people with disabilities could be threatened by applications of genetic research. The section is divided into four general areas of concern: the geneticization of human difference; the weakening of human rights and reinforcement of discrimination; the undermining of choice and self-determination; and participation in decision making. These topics provide background for the subsequent section which outlines a set of principles that act as ethical guidelines for evaluating the impact of new technologies on people with disabilities. The final section examines how these principles justice, non-discrimination, diversity, and autonomy and informed decision making) can be applied in relation to particular technologies.

The study included a review of existing information on the Lake Ontario waterfront area, a comparative analysis of physiography and vegetation patterns, field surveys, a photographic inventory of selected features, and public consultations. After an introduction, this study report reviews waterfront experiences including landscape types, landmarks, views, and sensory experiences. The third section discusses the importance of waterfront scenic resources; section four describes the means by which the waterfront changes. Section five offers guidelines and methods for protecting, restoring, or enhancing waterfront experiences. MICROLOG 96-02307 (3 fiche)

This plan provides a framework to guide the partners of the Lake Ontario Waterfront Regeneration Trust to identify and explain the places along the Waterfront Trail that are important to them. The plan is part of the Lake Ontario Greenway Strategy. After on the plan context and the Greenway Strategy, the plan identifies the cultural and natural subjects that could form the basis of an interpretation storyline. It explains 20 criteria for evaluating interpretation projects and describes over 80 meaningful places where such projects would be successful. Examples of interpretation projects are included for illustration. The subsequent section describes and illustrates nine interpretation methods: identification signage, interpretive media, multiple viewing apparatus, commemorative features, furniture, landscaping and design, eco-sheds, exhibits, and tours/programs. The final section outlines the steps needed for implementing the plan, potential opportunities for projects, and capital costs.

Raptors such as falcons, hawks, eagles, vultures, and owls are an important part of prairie ecology, yet some of the 25 species inhabiting the Canadian prairies are declining in numbers. This booklet provides advice on how prairie landowners can help to conserve raptors by such measures as protecting woodlots, creating windbreaks, preserving nest sites, reducing use of chemicals and pesticides that threaten raptors and their prey, and preventing electrocution of raptors by electric wires. The booklet includes a chapter on building nest boxes and platforms, and a section describing the appearance and ecology of prairie and parkland raptors.

In the 1980s, a large number of Latin American countries undertook stabilization and structural adjustment programs similar to the ones now being conducted in Eastern Europe. This book compiles papers by economists from four Eastern European and four Latin American countries who analyze the relevance of the Latin American experience for Eastern Europe. The papers have four main topics: privatization, fiscal policy, monetary policy, and external sector policies. The book also summarizes the lessons for Eastern Europe from the Latin American case studies discussed in the papers. The case studies focused on Chile, Brazil, Mexico, Argentina, Hungary, Poland, the Czech Republic, and Russia.

The Long-term effects of farming practices on soil quality, as influenced by farmer attitude and farm characteristics : final report

By D.W. Anderson and M.M. Boehm. Regina : Saskatchewan Agriculture & Food, ADF, 1995. vii, 66 p. : ill., Bibl.

MICROLOG 96-02260 (1 fiche)

The objective of this study was to evaluate the impact of various farming systems on the quality of sandy to loam textured soils in the Dark Brown soil zone of Saskatchewan. The research was designed to identify farming practices that are soil-conserving or soil-degrading, the characteristics and attitudes of farmers who used soil-conserving farming systems, and soil properties that reflect management effects on soil, with sufficient magnitude and sensitivity to be practical and measurable indicators of soil quality. The research was carried out on 20 fields which had been farmed using crop-fallow, continuous cropping, extended rotation, and permanent cover farming systems. By controlling for soil and landscape characteristics, it was possible to compare the long-term effects of the farming systems on soil quality. The study notes measurable differences in soil quality among the farming systems studied and also discusses the socio-economic differences among the farming systems and farmers.

Previous research evaluating the effectiveness and efficiency of legislative provisions relating to such detention was essentially descriptive and did not consider the characteristics of post-detention recidivists or the impact of preventive detention on criminal futures. This report explores more fully the issue of post-detention recidivism by introducing two statistical controls: level of risk for re-offending and time at risk in the community. The study methodology included collecting historical information from a variety of sources, comparing detention cases with the general penitentiary population, and post-detention follow-up. The reported results include characteristics of recidivists (including violent and sexual crime recidivists).

Measurement of emission rates of selected landfill gases from municipal solid waste landfills

The emissions of gases from municipal solid waste landfills are presently not well-defined and are estimated using mathematical models. This report presents results of a study that measured emissions of methane, carbon dioxide, and nitrous oxide from landfills and investigated whether existing mathematical models were capable of generating acceptable emission data. The report begins with a review of landfill gas emission measurement methodologies and of the development of a modified flux measuring system using a dilution tube sampler. The report then describes a field test in which emissions were measured from the Ridge Road landfill near Ottawa. The measured emissions data were compared to emissions predicted by the Environmental Protection Agency Landfill Air Emissions Estimation Model. Measurement results presented include gas concentrations, the spatial and temporal variability of emissions, and the influence of ambient temperature on emissions.

This publication presents the proceedings of a conference that examined performance indicators in the context of the teaching and research roles of universities, primarily from the standpoint of their use as tools to enhance the ability of institutions to meet their goals and objectives. Volume 1 (bilingual, French and English) contains keynote addresses on benchmarking, Australian and American experience with performance indicators, and the importance of those indicators with regard to accountability. This volume also contains brief summaries of the conference workshops whose papers are presented in volume 2 (English only). The topics of the six workshops are: educational efficiency, universities as student-centred organizations, research intensiveness, the efficiency and effectiveness of university research, using student assessments to improve academic programs, and the link between teaching and research.

Meeting the challenge of climate change : a status report on initiatives in Ontario to reduce greenhouse gas emissions

Prepared for the Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment and the Council of Energy Ministers. Toronto : Ministry of Environment & Energy, 1995. ii, 40 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-02781 (1 fiche)

This status report outlines activities and programs under way to help control and reduce greenhouse gas emissions in Ontario. It begins with a review of the potential impacts of climatic change and of the sources of greenhouse gases (primarily carbon dioxide). It then outlines principles governing the Ontario approach to addressing the climate change problem and presents an inventory of actions which reduce greenhouse gas emissions. The inventory begins with a review of broad-based activities and then reviews sector-specific activities in the fields of governmental energy management, municipal government initiatives, commercial and residential energy efficiency, the industrial sector, energy production and supply, transportation, landfill gas recovery, agriculture, and forest management.

The Manitoba Department of Environment implemented a biomonitoring program during 1978 to determine the extent of trace metal and organochlorine residues within aquatic environments of the province. This report describes results of the program's trace metal analyses of fish muscle tissue collected from the Assiniboine River at Lake of the Prairies and near the cities of Brandon and Portage la Prairie. The program gave special emphasis to determination of mercury levels due to concerns over health effects the extensive past use of mercury in agriculture and industry. The report describes the sampling and analytical methods used and presents analytical data and trends over 1978-92 for such species as northern pike, mooneye, common sucker, walleye, shorthead redhorse sucker, and sauger. The report concludes with a discussion of the environmental and human health implications of the results.

Increasing demand for rare and disseminated elements such as vanadium has led to interest in extracting those elements from heavy oil, bitumen, and oil shale. This would provide additional benefits such as extra income from byproduct sales. This book begins with a review of the origin and distribution of bitumen and heavy oil and of the rare and disseminated elements found in oil and bitumen. The book then discusses the metallogenic specialization of oil and gas provinces worldwide, the origin of rare/disseminated element concentrations in oil and bitumen, and genetic types of metalliferous oil/bitumen deposits. Subsequent chapters describe distribution patterns of metalliferous heavy oil and bitumen by region, prediction of zones of occurrence, rare elements found in oil shales, total global rare-metal resources in bitumen/heavy oil/oil shale deposits, and the joint development of metalliferous bitumen/oil deposits.

The traditional final polish used in the metallographic examination of zirconium-niobium pressure tube alloys comprises an attack polish that contains a 0.05-micron alumina or fly ash slurry with dilute hydrofluoric acid. This polish preferentially etches the material adjacent to the inclusions, distorts or removes the inclusions, and methods using this polish are unsuitable for automation. This paper describes experiments conducted to develop and test an alternative metallographic preparation that reveals inclusions with geometric detail intact, retains small particles, does not contaminate the alloy surface with silica, and is suitable for automation. The final polish uses a caustic alumina slurry to produce a chemical-mechanical polish that keeps the inclusions intact.

Poly-beta-hydroxyalkanoates (PHAs) are a family of beta-hydroxy carboxylic acid polyesters which are of interest for their biodegradability. PHAs can be produced more cheaply by biological process than by chemical synthesis, and the resulting polymer is optically active and degrades rapidly in the appropriate environment (such as soil burial and compost heaps). Commercialization of PHA is limited by its high production cost, mainly due to the cost of the substrate and the separation process. This report describes research on bacterial conversion of cheese whey (an abundant and cheap waste from the food industry) and hemicellulose (from low-cost forest and agricultural wastes) to substrates for high-protein biomass and PHA production. The research included investigation of the use of continuous culture of Alcaligenes eutrophus to produce PHA and an economic evaluation of the cost of PHA production from various substrates at different production scales.

It also serves as a tool for Ministry staff to determine the completeness of an EA. The document begins with a review of the Ministry's mandate in such areas as fish and wildlife, forests, parks, and water resources, as well as the organization of the Ministry and its role in the EA review process. The document then reviews the Ministry's information and documentation requirements in each area of the Ministry's mandate. A final section outlines Ministry permit requirements. The appendix includes information on the legislation and policies for which the Ministry has responsibility and which are most relevant to preparing an EA; a list of Ministry regional and district offices and of conservation authorities; and a glossary.

Nous avons constaté l'existence d'une mobilité intergénérationnelle considérable parmi ceux qui touchent un revenu moyen, et que la transmission du statut économique est importante aux extrémités supérieures et inférieures de l'échelle des revenus. De plus, le père d'environ un tiers de ceux qui occupent le quartile inférieur occupaient la même place dans l'échelle des revenus. De fait, l'avantage sur le plan du revenu de ceux dont le père se trouvait dans le décile supérieur par rapport à quelqu'un dont le père était dans le décile inférieur est de l'ordre de 40 %. Nous traitons également de l'incidence politique de ces conclusions, ainsi que de quelques-unes de leurs limites et de la direction que devrait prendre les recherches futures.

The report begins with some general comments about facilities and programming, including the goals of female corrections, the use of a holistic treatment philosophy, security issues, and the influence of women's equality legislation on correctional programs. The report then reviews specific programs, including educational programs, vocational instruction, substance abuse programs, therapy programs, pre- and post-release programs, volunteer programs, recreation, and victim compensation. A separate section considers programs for long-term inmates and their special needs as compared to those of short-term inmates.

This paper demonstrates how the order of greater central riskiness proposed by Gollier (1995) can be applied to situations with dependent risky assets. This order was shown to be the least constrained necessary and sufficient condition to guarantee that all risk-averse agents reduce their demand for a risky position when a marginal increase in risk is imposed in a model with one risky asset. Recent researchers have proposed two models of comparative static changes with more than one risky asset, and obtained that standard conditions on preferences for comparative statics with one random parameter remain valid. This paper introduces a different extension by considering restrictions on changes in risk instead of restrictions on utility functions. The paper shows how the concept of linear stochastic dominance generates the desired results for mean preserving spreads and first order stochastic dominances. Examples are discussed.

Transportation of grain in Canada is moving away from a highly regulated regime to a less-regulated and more market-based environment. The current allocation system for grain cars, based on the objective of fair and equitable access, is more conducive to the former regime than the latter. This report reviews the current system of grain-car allocation and evaluates six different options for modernizing the car allocation process to contribute to the optimization of producer returns and to prairie economies. These options are: a bid system; a lottery system; a central agency for controlling allocation; regionally-based allocation; a shipper dedicated system; and bid/pooling, where producers own cars and shippers bid for their use, with profits distributed to producers. The appendix contains a review of railcar allocation practices in other countries and for other commodities.

The report then explains the role of martens in the Newfoundland ecosystem and assesses the potential for recovery of species populations to a degree that would ensure continued survival. The report concludes with an outline of a marten recovery plan that would have the ultimate goal of achieving a total fall population of about a thousand individuals in at least two discrete populations. Aspects of the plan include establishment of reserves and protected areas, monitoring of marten populations, modify snaring and trapping regulations, protection of habitat, and initiating a captive breeding research program.

Previous studies have shown that nitrification was inhibited in some forest soils of Saskatchewan. This paper examines the hypothesis that there is a naturally occurring compound or compounds in the soil that inhibits nitrification, and that this compound might inhibit nitrification when applied to agricultural soils. The paper describes three laboratory studies. The first two were designed to determine whether nitrification inhibitors could be transferred directly from a forest soil to agricultural soil via additions of varying rates of forest soil. The third study was designed to determine if the factors inhibiting nitrification in forest soils could be extracted in water or methanol, concentrated, and subsequently transferred to agricultural soils.

The data analysis results define water mass boundary positions in the upper 450 meters during the period of each cruise. Charts of surface boundary conditions based on satellite infrared imagery aid in interpreting the cruise data, and small numbers of bathythermograph casts to 1830 meters and conductivity-temperature-depth recorder casts to 1000 meters provide data for deeper waters. The report also describes the variation of temperature and salinity over time at a fixed location (41 degrees north, 61 degrees 30 minutes west) based on three occupations for periods of 1.5 to 3.5 days.

The Correctional Service of Canada's Offender Substance Abuse Pre-Release program is a multi-faceted, cognitive-behavioral substance abuse intervention program developed specifically to address the substance abuse needs of offenders with intermediate to substantial problems. This report presents results of a study undertaken to evaluate the effectiveness of that program in improving offenders' post-release success and in changing their problematic substance abuse behavior. The investigators examined both intermediate and post-release outcomes for 317 offenders who completed the program between January 1990 and August 1992. To link program performance and post-release outcome, they analyzed pre/post measures in relation to re-admission rates. Results presented include the severity of the offenders' substance abuse problems, offender performance during the program, and the relation between program performance and post-release success.

This report outlines a conceptual and analytical framework for quantifying risks to terrestrial wildlife that might be exposed to solid-phase materials potentially associated with oil sands reclamation. The initial phase of the assessment involved screening soil/tailings against published criteria to produce a short list of ten constituents (eight organic and two inorganic) that pose a potential risk to terrestrial biota. The assessment then developed a probabilistic model that simulated exposure doses to three representative terrestrial wildlife receptors (deer mouse, white-tailed deer, kestrel), computed the probability of exceeding a chemical exposure limit for each of the receptors, and summarized the relative contribution of the different exposure pathways to the total exposure dose.

One-meter level kinematic point positioning using precise orbits and satellite clock corrections

G. Lachapelle...et al. Ottawa : Geomatics Canada, 1994. 9 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-02597 (1 fiche)

The objective of this paper is to investigate the level of performance achievable in Global Positioning System (GPS) single-point positioning mode with precise post-mission orbits and satellite clock corrections. The investigators examined the quality of the satellite clock correction parameters provided by Natural Resources Canada's Geodetic Survey Division, using shipborne data collected over a six-day period off the coast of Vancouver Island in October 1993 with narrow correlator spacing, single-frequency, ten-channel code receivers. A six-day precise orbit data set was obtained whose absolute coordinates are accurate to better than 10 centimeters, and code measurements were used to obtain the single-point positions at every second. Differentially corrected GPS positions were obtained separately to assess the accuracy of the above single-point positions.

This report reviews habitat classification systems offering a set of procedures to identify, delimit, and describe the habitats of foreshore fishes, and ecological models describing relationships between habitat attributes such as vegetation type and fish properties such as biomass. Ecological models include fish-habitat models, which can be divided on the basis of mathematical approaches (index, simple qualitative, complex qualitative, regression, and probability functions) or structural approaches (species- and habitat-specific); trophodynamic models, which describe feeding interactions among fish in foreshore habitats (predator-prey, food-chain, and energy/nutrient flow models); and models that assess the role of specific fishes in terms of energy transfer within a single foreshore habitat, or models which provide a holistic view of how various habitats interact. The report concludes with a discussion on the use and utility of geographic information systems as a tool for developing models and systems for assessing fish habitat productive capacity.

Given the availability of suitable phenology models, forecasting seasonal events for integrated pest management also requires the availability of adequate temperature data, running large numbers of simulations, and interpreting and representing the results in a form suitable for decision making. BioSIM, a software product developed by the Canadian Forest Service, was designed to perform these tasks. This report is an analysis of BioSIM's performance in forecasting the phenology of spruce budworm populations in New Brunswick in 1992 and 1993, using the phenology of spruce budworm populations in New Brunswick in 1992 and 1993, using the Régnière and the Lysyk models.

Phase II extension : physical characteristics and solubility of long-lived airborne particulates in uranium producing and manufacturing facilities

This paper reports on studies of the rates of dissolution in simulated lung fluid of the radioactive species uranium-238 and radium-226 from aerosols of a high-grade (40%) Saskatchewan uranium ore. The work was done to gain information on the effect of aerosol particle size distribution on solubility rates. The investigators performed triplicate studies on sets of three particle size fractions of the ore. The subjected nine aerosol-bearing filters and a blank filter to parallel extractions by simulated lung fluid over a 12-day period, and analyzed fluid fractions at intervals to allow estimates of dissolution rates. Results presented include percentage extraction over specified time intervals for each aerosol fraction for the two radioactive species studied. CA ND PS SC

Ce document présente les résultats d'une enquête sur l'intégration du travail en milieu résidentiel au Canada. Ce sommaire expose les constatations clés de l'étude, avec un accent particulier sur les questions de planification et de conception. Les résultats de l'enquête sur les travailleurs à domicile permettent de percevoir quelles nouvelles occasions d'affaires ce segment de la population pourrait apporter aux constructeurs et rénovateurs domiciliaires. Ce sommaire expose cinq aspects importants pour l'industrie du logement : le télétravail et le travail à domicile constituent des tendances croissantes ; le travail à domicile appelle de nouvelles solutions en conception de logements ; le travail à domicile génère des activités de rénovation ; le travail à domicile peut constituer un facteur important dans la décision de déménager et d'acheter un nouveau logement ; et, le travail à domicile donne l'occasion de connecter son logement et son quartier à l'autoroute de l'information. Personal care homes in Manitoba are designed for people who are unable to live in their own homes because of their need for care, but who do not require the services of an acute- or extended-treatment hospital. This guide is designed to help clarify what can be planned for new personal care homes and to provide guidelines for changes that may be made to improve the environment in existing homes. Sections of the guide provide information on location and siting of a personal care home, interior environmental considerations such as lighting and color, public areas such as corridors and washrooms, communal areas (including dining rooms, lounges, a shop, and health care room), the administration area, the resident living area, service areas such as kitchen and laundry, and communications (including the nurse call system, alert system, public address system, and telephone).

This guide is intended to serve as a guide for Saskatchewan health district planning committees and boards as they begin to plan for programs and services that will enhance the health status of residents of their district. The guide begins with a definition of planning and an outline of the principles of planning for wellness and health reform. It then reviews the requirements of strategic planning, steps to be taken in developing a strategic plan (including conducting a needs assessment and holding public consultations), and a framework for strategic planning. This framework includes a mission statement, philosophy statement, goals and objectives, plan implementation, and plan evaluation. The appendix includes a sample mission statement and sample techniques for problem solving, information sharing, and decision making.

There has been increasing concern regarding the potential environmental impact of polybrominated dibenzo-p-dioxins (PBDDs), furans (PBDFs), and mixed bromochloro dibenzo-p-dioxins (BCDDs) and furans (BCDFs). These compounds are of particular interest owing to their structural similarities to polychlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxins (PCDDs) and furans (PCDFs) and to the expectation that they will exhibit biological activities similar to those of their chlorinated analogues. This report summarizes the major known sources of PBDDs, PBDFs, BCDDs, and BCDFs, including contaminants in commercial chemicals, waste incinerators, and motor vehicle emissions; the methodologies used for analyzing PBDD/Fs and BCDD/Fs; the environmental distribution and fate of those compounds; and their biological and toxicological effects, as reported in the literature.

The Possible use of parasitic isopods as bioindicators of herring migration paths in the Pacific Particular species of parasites can be used as bioindicators of population structure, migration paths, and other aspects of the ecology of a given object of the fishery. In the case of parasitic isopods of the family Cymothoidae, which are unsuitable for population studies, they can be suitable as indicators of migration paths of fish. The basic requirement for this kind of indication is that the parasite must infest the host only in the foraging or spawning part of its range. Using the example of infestation of fish of the genus Trachurus by cymothoids of the genus Ceratothoa, this paper attempts to show how data on the geographic distribution of these isopods may be interpreted to understand herring migration paths in the Pacific Ocean.

This report presents results of laboratory and field studies on the use of ultraviolet light for prevention of zebra mussel infestation in low-volume water systems. The first phase of the research consisted of batch tests with both veligers and juvenile mussels to allow determination of the most effective treatment protocols using ultraviolet technology and to develop appropriate test protocols for field trials. The second phase involved development of flow-through tests that allowed in-line testing with four different treatment configurations. These configurations consisted two closed-pipe systems using ultraviolet C (254 nanometer) wavelengths, one closed-pipe system using combinations of ultraviolet B and C (200-400 nanometers) and one open-channel system using ultraviolet C. Results reported include percent latent mortalities and the factors influencing mortality rates.

The introduction of zebra mussels (Dreissena polymorpha) into the Great Lakes and their impact on water users has resulted in an intensive search for methods to control this species, which can clog water intakes and related structures. Methods that do not require addition of chemicals such as chlorine or oxidants are of particular interest. This paper presents results of experiments investigating the potential of ultrasonic underwater acoustics to eliminate zebra mussel veligers from the water column in a flow through a test chamber. The investigators conducted field tests at the Decew Falls Generating Station, a site having a heavily infested body of water. Veliger-laden water was passed through the chamber and water samples from both upstream and downstream were analyzed for mussel larvae or juveniles; in addition, biofilm from settling plates was examined to determine whether downstream settling occurred. Results presented cover the two months (October-November) of the field trial.

This manual is designed to explain easily-applied wildlife improvement techniques for forest land in Prince Edward Island. It begins with a section on forest wildlife planning that includes basic information on animal habits, forest changes over time, edge management, and forest animal/plant identification. This is followed by guidelines on forest roads and wetlands, including erosion control, stream edge management, and providing ponds for wildlife. Other sections of the manual cover the establishment of cover and habitation for forest wildlife, controlling of certain predators, forest improvement techniques for wildlife (including forest management practices that help wildlife), and suggestions for studying forest wildlife. Lists of common species and their habitat or forest use patterns are included.

This report begins with an analysis of the salient socio-demographic characteristics of the off-reserve aboriginal (ORA) population, as derived from Statistics Canada data. This is followed by a summary of the deliberations of Congress of Aboriginal Peoples board members at a workshop on the ORA housing situation and future ORA housing policy initiatives. The report then analyzes current ORA housing problems, based on information from reports, official documents, and consultations with knowledgeable persons. Finally, the report discusses the requirement for a new Canada Mortgage and Housing (CMHC) ORA housing policy, the funding ramifications of such a policy, and the need for new administrative arrangements to facilitate CMHC interfacing with the Congress of Aboriginal Peoples in the delivery of affordable housing. Recommendations are included with each section of the report. The appendix includes statistics and discussion on the ORA population.

This policy statement, circulated for input to all the major groups interested in the municipal planning process in Ontario, provides policy direction on matters of provincial interest in land use planning and development. The policies in the statement relate to promotion of efficient, cost-effective development (of communities, housing, services, and infrastructure) which stimulate economic growth while protecting the environment and public health; protection of resources (agricultural, mineral, natural and cultural heritage) for their economic and environmental benefits; and reduction of the potential for long-term public cost or risk by directing development away from areas where there is a risk to public health or safety, or of property damage. The policies give Ontario municipalities the flexibility to make local decisions that reflect local needs while protecting the environment.

This report summarizes a variety of build, own, operate, transfer, purchase, lease, and finance arrangements that make up public/private partnerships. These arrangements range from complete privatization to operating part of a system for a fixed fee and for a fixed time. The report reviews 18 case studies from Nova Scotia to British Columbia including public/private partnerships which are being planned, completed, in operation, or planned but failed to materialize. The projects reviewed include housing, schools, roads, recreation facilities, libraries, water treatment plants, and waste management facilities. The case studies and accompanying evaluation examine why the private sector may be more efficient than government, the benefits from private-sector involvement, and the difficulties involved in private/public partnerships. En 1992, la Conférence des Nations Unies sur l'environnement et le développement (CNUED) a réuni des représentants de presque tous les pays du monde dans le but d'inciter la communauté mondiale à s'engager à poursuivre les objectifs du développement durable. Action 21, l'une des principales réalisations de cette conférence, est un plan d'action ambitieux portant sur 39 questions concernant l'environnement et le développement. Par la suite, les Nations Unies ont créé la Commission du développement durable (CDD) pour assurer un suivi des progrès réalisés dans l'atteinte des objectifs de la CNUED. Ce deuxième rapport du Canada à la CDD résume les progrès accomplis, les enseignements qu'ils ont tirés de leurs expériences et les défis auxquels ils ont fait face pour atteindre les objectifs du développement durable. Le rapport met l'accent sur les chapitres et thèmes d'Action 21 qui seront débattus à la session de 1995 de la CDD. Le rapport tente plutôt d'isoler les tendances et thèmes majeurs des mesures prises par le Canada à l'égard de chacun des chapitres en question. Le rapport contient également une brève description des progrès accomplis récemment sur des sujets traités dans les chapitres concernant les questions sectorielles et abordés, en mai 1994, lors de la session de la CDD. Rebâtir Montréal autrement : document de réflexion sur les orientations des politiques d'emploi, de sécurité du revenu et de formation professionnelle nécessaires à la restructuration de Montréal

Montréal est une ville en crise. Cette crise revêt deux significations complémentaires. Elle désigne en premier lieu la désorganisation d'un système social particulier, le déclin de l'ordre ayant réglé le fonctionnement des structures économique, politique et culturelle d'une formation sociale durant une période historique donnée. D'autre part, la crise présage aussi d'une transition, de l'émergence d'un nouvel ordre, d'une transformation du système social observé. Rebâtir Montréal autrement est un document de réflexion sur les orientations des politiques d'emploi, de sécurité du revenu et de formation professionnelle nécessaires à la restructuration de Montréal. Les points qui y sont abordés sont : l'ampleur des problèmes économiques et sociaux; la complexité des changements actuels; les stratégies économiques et politiques actuelles; certaines contraintes pour aménager la transition; et, les orientations fondamentales d'un modèle alternatif de développement social. The federal Immigrant Investor Program, created in 1986, combines two distinct aims: providing an immigration class for a qualified group of business people and inviting a stream of capital that can be invested in growth-oriented small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs). This report presents the findings of an advisory panel formed to advise on ways to improve the Program's economic benefits. It begins with a review of the aims and history of the Program and then discusses the needs of Program investors and investees. Topics covered include the capital needs of SMEs, the SME risk capital markets in Canada, the factors that attract immigrant investors to the Program, and the types of investment vehicles that are appropriate. The report ends with recommendations for designing a more effective Program, including the resolution of conflicting objectives of investors and investees, the structure and management of a proposed new Program, and marketing and regulation under the new Program. The appendix includes a review of the risk/reward cycle for patient risk capital and an outline of other options considered for a new Program. CA CO EX ND PA SA SS ST

The purpose of this report is to review the structure of the financial services industry in Saskatchewan and the forces of change operating within it; to identify issues of concern to industry participants; and to identify options to address those issues and assess the impacts of such options. The report includes an overview of the changes taking place in the financial services marketplace throughout Canada and internationally over the past decade, providing insights into how these developments impact on Saskatchewan. Sectors of the financial services industry reviewed include the deposit-taking sector, life insurance, and property/casualty insurance. The report evaluates policy issues and options for those sectors and in the areas of regulatory principles and industry-wide issues such as business powers and related-parties transactions. Discussion of legislation focuses on the Credit Union Act, Saskatchewan Insurance Act, and the Trust and Loan Corporations Act. CA CO JU MS ND SS

The 1992 United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) brought together almost every country in the world in an effort to have the global community commit itself to the goal of sustainable development. Among its major achievements was Agenda 21, an ambitious plan of action on 39 environment and development issues. The United Nations subsequently created the Commission on Sustainable Development (CSD) to monitor progress towards achievement of UNCED's goals. This second report of Canada to the CSD summarizes the progress, lessons learned, and challenges in achieving the goals of sustainable development. It concentrates on the chapters and themes in Agenda 21 that will be discussed at the 1995 session of the CSD. It attempts to isolate the major trends and themes in Canadian responses to each of those chapters. It also includes short summaries of recent developments in topics related to the sectoral chapters discussed during the May 1994 session of the CSD.

This report is based on a study conducted to guide the development of a therapeutic program for women who self-injure at the Kingston Prison for Women. The study involved interviewing prisoners to acquire an understanding of the experiences of self-injurious behavior in the prison context, interviewing security staff to assess front-line issues and concerns regarding self-injurious behavior among prisoners, and interviewing relevant groups of individuals to determine the best strategy for establishing a structure in which to implement recommended actions. The report examines the extent of the self-injury problem at the prison, outlines the current response to self-injury and the reactions of prisoners and staff to this response, and discusses injury reduction and identification of potential suicides. The discussion includes information on the frequency of childhood sexual abuse among prisoners and analysis of factors identified as exacerbating self-injury.

To Coordinator, Planning and Environment Committee; from Planning and Property Commissioner, Acting Environmental Services Commissioner. Ottawa : The Depts., 1995. 24 p. : ill. MICROLOG 96-02431 (1 fiche)

This report describes how Ottawa-Carleton will choose a regional development strategy to guide population growth and land use in the Regional Municipality to the year 2021, when the regional population could reach about one million. It is proposed to test three families of development scenarios. The process for choosing the recommended regional development strategy entails two phases, from an initial screening of the broad scenarios to the development and evaluation of a limited number of alternatives. The scenarios vary in terms of the assumed distribution of population, households, and jobs in each of the urban and rural areas of the region. A framework appended to this report sets out five basic principles to guide the review process for the Official Plan, the Transportation Master Plan, and the Water and Wastewater Master Plan. A second appendix outlines criteria proposed for evaluation at the strategic phase. MU ON PL SS

Residential exemptions from judgment executions

Winnipeg : Manitoba Law Reform Commission, 1995. i, 27 p. : Bibl. (Report / Manitoba. Law Reform Commission; no. 90) ISBN 0-7711-1441-9 MICROLOG 96-02399 (1 fiche)

A person who obtains a money judgment against someone else can enforce it by execution against the assets of the judgment debtor. Execution is the process by which the debtor's assets are seized and sold to satisfy the debt. Statutory exemptions exist to preserve the basic necessities of life for judgment debtors. In Manitoba, debtors who own their own residences are granted a period of one year during which no residential execution can take place; in addition, the debtor is granted a specified equity exemption. This report examines the rationale for a residential exemption in Manitoba, with reference to practice in other jurisdictions. It makes recommendations for reforming the legislation related to judgment executions, considering the level of equity exemption, the degree of exemption for co-owners, the exempt proceeds of sale, and the applicability of the exemption to personal property residences such as mobile homes. The appendix contains text and annotations of recommended legislative amendments. JU MS PR SS

Resource analysis guidelines for land and resource management planning in British Columbia : interim guidelines -- Draft

Victoria : Province of British Columbia, 1995. 105 p. : Bibl. On cover: Version 2. MICROLOG 96-02111 (2 fiche)

Land and resource management planning (LRMP) is the sub-regional component of integrated resource planning in British Columbia. Resource analyses are conducted as part of the LRMP process to provide substantive and objective information to support informed decision making. Resource analysis consists of gathering, examining, and interpreting relevant resource-related information; organizing and integrating this information to assist in developing scenarios; and assessing the impacts of those scenarios. After a review of the LRMP context and resource analysis, this document describes the analysis tasks and analytical support needed for building a knowledge base and for scenario development, outlines the scenario analysis process, links resource analysis to other assessment processes in LRMP, and describes resource analysis methods appropriate for selected resources and sectors. An appendix discusses the application of geographic information systems in resource analysis. BC NR PL PR SC

Resource characterization of the McMurray/Wabiskaw deposit in the Athabasca oil sands area : a synthesis

The McMurray/Wabiskaw stratigraphic interval within the Lower Cretaceous Mannville Group contains most of the reserves of the Athabasca Oil Sands Area. This publication describes the stratigraphic framework, lithofacies, and resource distribution (water, gas, oil and water sands) for the McMurray/Wabiskaw deposit over the entire Area. It is a synthesis of previously published research, updated to include data from recent drilling and a new stratigraphic scheme based on sequence stratigraphic principles. Depositional modelling described in the publication incorporates new data and revisions to the previously published (Strobl et al, 1993) facies scheme. The publication presents 11 representative wells to characterize the facies and depositional environments for the stratigraphic interval. Sections are also included on the regional geologic setting, stratigraphic surfaces, hydrocarbon emplacement and trapping mechanisms, and mineralogy. The appendices include a palynofacies analysis, sand and clay mineralogy data, and core analyses. AL EN NR PR SC

Rest requirements for northern wheatgrass following defoliation : final report

By Brendan Kowalenko and J.T. Romo. Regina : Saskatchewan Agriculture & Food, ADF, 1995. x, 133 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 96-02262 (2 fiche)

Many grazing systems fail to meet the goals of maintaining a favorable botanical composition and a maximal level of pasture productivity because they ignore the requirement of providing plants with adequate rest between grazing events or defoliation. Northern wheatgrass (Agropyron dasystachym), a dominant species on Canadian mixed prairie, decreases under improper grazing. This study was initiated to determine the effects of defoliation at different times of the growing season on the recovery in yield and the cold hardiness of northern wheatgrass at a research station in southwestern Saskatchewan. The researchers imposed defoliation treatments from May to August in 1991, 1992, and 1993, and determined green biomass, standing dead and total standing crop of defoliated northern wheatgrass until they regained similar levels as a control crop. Cold tolerance was determined in early and late winter. The implications of the results for management of grazing lands are discussed. AG LS MS PR SC

This report describes the results and analyses of data collected in a study of halibut bycatch in the British Columbia trawl fishery. The primary purpose of the study was to assess the bycatch and mortality of Pacific halibut caught; a secondary objective was to relate mortality of trawl-caught halibut to various fishery and non-fishery factors. The report uses estimates of mean halibut catch per unit effort and halibut catch ratios to estimate bycatch for the trawl fishery in Hecate Strait where the amount of data collected is sufficient to allow estimation. The report also summarizes the results of analyses of size composition and physical condition data for trawl-caught halibut by area. Due to the limited amount of data collected, estimates of halibut bycatch in areas other than the Hecate Strait were not attempted.

The analysis highlights three approaches to improving service delivery: structural change to separate policy and operational functions; implementation of quality management principles; and using performance-oriented measures, including performance targets, service standards, and client assessment. Case studies are included on service quality initiatives and on single-window delivery of public services, the latter often illustrating the benefits of implementing service approaches based on information technologies. The book ends with a section on varieties of service provision arrangements in which governments work in tandem with organizations (both commercial and non-profit) outside the public sector.

Modern plant breeding has been very unsuccessful at improving resistance of crops to pests and diseases. This book suggests a solution to this problem by breeding crops to achieve horizontal resistance to diseases and pests. The book explains this solution, with reference to the drawbacks of Mendelian genetics compared to a biometric approach, types of infection and host-parasite interaction, epidemics, genetic uniformity and diversity, genetic response to selection pressure, plant pathosystems, and the disadvantages of current methods of crop protection and breeding. The book presents examples illustrating lessons learned from experiences with such crops as potatoes, corn, coffee, sugarcane, and ancient clonally propagated plants. Finally, the book provides specific solutions for breeding resistant crops: forming a plant breeding club, using various techniques described, screening existing populations, and forming farmer-participation schemes.

This report reviews the history of Cityhome's policy regarding conversion of its buildings to cooperative housing and examines three alternative models of tenant participation: the historical Cityhome participation model, the current participation model (the updated historic model), and the continuum model. The third model presents a series of levels of tenant participation which requires more formal tests or requirements as tenants move up the ladder of participation. Finally, the report proposes a policy respecting self-management or conversion to a cooperative, with a discussion of the financial implications of conversion.

This report presents a series of options for interjurisdictional river basin institutions for consideration by the Northern River Basins Study. After an introduction, the report discusses a series of paired concepts that have important implications for institutional arrangements: governmental versus nongovernmental responsibilities; technical versus political issues; power versus influence; and centralization versus decentralization. A list of specific questions illustrates the type of decision path for selecting particular institutions. The report then discusses a number of possible purposes and functions for an interjurisdictional body in the Northern River Basins. The next four sections set out the following models for interjurisdictional arrangements: the intergovernmental model, the independent commission model, the government-driven inclusive model, and the stakeholder-driven inclusive model. For each model, a general description is followed by illustrative case studies. The report ends with a review of a modular approach to institutional design.

They examine these deficiencies more closely by focusing on the fishing industries (harvesting and processing) and also describe the importance of UI to the economies of the Atlantic Provinces. The authors end with a vision for income security reform in the region and suggestions for handling the transition period to a reformed UI system. Three data appendices contain tables on how UI and social as-

The primary purpose of this booklet is to illustrate and compare three important standards (levels of expectation) that have been set for diploma examination writing in Social Studies 30: excellent (5), proficient (4), and satisfactory (3). Sample papers that were used to illustrate the scoring criteria for group leaders and markers as part of the marker training procedures used in January 1995 are presented here, along with accompanying commentaries, or rationales, that tie these papers to the scoring criteria. The six example papers are arranged by topic in groups of three. The first paper in each group is the one that was used as the example paper of "excellent 5", and the final paper in each group is the one that was used as the example paper for "satisfactory 3", during group-leader and marker training. Each paper is accompanied by specific commentaries that discuss the paper in terms of the scoring criteria used in marking. Finally, two papers that exceeded the criteria established for excellence are included as a celebration of student achievement and as an acknowledgement of the high standards being attained by some of Alberta's Social Studies 30 students.

The Long Range Transport of Atmospheric Pollutants-Quebec Network (LQN) was established for the purpose of monitoring changes in lake water quality in southern Quebec. This report describes an application of the SIGMA/SLAM model to the problem of estimating critical sulfate loads in all LQN lakes. It begins with a description of the characteristics of the LQN, the geostatistical analytical methodology used, and the characterization of lake water and precipitation. It then presents results of application of two numerical models to LQN lake data to estimate average lake water pH reduction due to industrialization. The SIGMA/SLAM model was also used to examine the effect of Canadian and American sulfur dioxide emission reduction programs with respect to forecast sulfate deposition for the year 2003. The results indicate the adjustments required to those programs in order to protect sensitive lakes in Quebec.

The School Sites Acquisition Statutes Amendments Act, passed by the British Columbia legislature in 1995, enables local agencies to play an important role in the acquisition of school sites in a timely manner, at reasonable cost, and in locations where local residential development is driving the need for new schools. The legislation amends both the provincial Municipal Act and School Act, and provides authority for local governments to acquire land or a cash equivalent for a new school site from a landowner at the time of subdivision. This guide explains key elements of the new act and presents a compendium of the most frequently asked questions regarding the act.

Le Forum avait d'abord envisagé de commander une série de documents d'orientation tournant autour du thème de la pauvreté de l'enfance. Ce document se penche sur la sécurité des familles en période d'insécurité. Les points précisément abordés sont les suivants : la sécurité des familles à l'heure de la mondialisation ; l'insécurité économique d'hier à aujourd'hui ; facteurs socio-économiques et développement humain ; les changements démographiques et la qualité de la vie au Canada depuis la fin de la guerre ; l'insécurité des familles au Québec - un produit de la révolution dite "tranquille" de nos élites québécoises ; le noeud des contradictions - les femmes et la sécurité des familles au Canada, dans les années 1990 ; et, l'illusion d'une société charitable - un mythe canadien.

Sediment transport and its environmental implications in the lower Fraser River and Fraser Delta

By Patrick McLaren and Ping Ren. Ottawa : Environment Canada, Environmental Conservation, 1995. iii, 107 p. : ill., Maps, Bibl. On cover: Fraser River Action Plan. Fold. maps not filmed.
MICROLOG 96-02216 (2 fiche)

This report presents results of efforts to determine the net sediment transport patterns in the lower Fraser River using a relatively new technique known as sediment trend analysis. This largely qualitative approach uses for its data the relative changes in complete grain size distributions of the existing sediments. The analysis provides information on the probability of each grain size being transported, which directly relates to the dynamic behavior of the sedimentological environment. The investigators undertook sediment trend analysis on about 1500 grab samples from the lower Fraser, the delta, and its foreslope, at a regular grid spacing varying from 100 to 1000 meters. The report establishes separate transport trends for two sediment types: sand (including muddy sand) and mud (including sandy mud). It also determines areas of erosion, stability, and deposition and discusses the implications of the results for dredging and for contaminant transport.

SEEDWHERE is a microcomputer-based program developed as a generic tool to help make biologically sound seed and nursery stock collection and transfer decisions. The program determines the similarity of climate between planting and/or regeneration sites and also across large regions. SEEDWHERE is based on the assumption that populations of tree species can become genetically differentiated through adaptations to local environmental conditions, in particular to climate. The program was designed to enable the climatic similarity of various locations to be measured, and for maps to be produced that indicate geographic areas and locations with a similar climate. The program can be applied in any region where the necessary spatial database development has occurred, such as southern Ontario. This paper describes the SEEDWHERE methodology and illustrates its application, in conjunction with the Ontario Climate Model, to southern Ontario.

The commission paid particular attention to the existence of tax-free allowances and special indemnities and to the government's announced intention to end present pension arrangements as of June 1995. The commission used the total compensation method to compare members' compensation with compensation in the private sector and obtained benchmark compensation rates derived from an analysis of private-sector jobs with similar skill requirements and job demands. The commission specifically examined total compensation of members who do not hold special positions, ministers with portfolio, the opposition leader, and the Premier. The report recommends a new total compensation plan based on principles of comparability with similar work, fairness, objectivity, and transparency to the public.

The book is written from the point of view that sexuality education involves three aspects: development of self-esteem; teaching of social skills; and providing sexual information about bodies and feelings. It contains guidelines that will aid parents to help their children feel confident about themselves, learn how to make friends and be a friend, and learn the kinds of behavior that are acceptable in public and in private. It also contains ideas that will help parents talk to their children about body changes and sexual feelings, and includes facts about varieties of sexual expression and about many different sexual issues such as parenthood, birth control, sexually transmitted diseases, and sexual abuse.

mals, carabid beetles, ants, salamanders, and resident birds in winter. The investigators addressed three questions related to fauna in white pine: whether they differ from fauna of other old-growth forest types, whether they differ from fauna in mature white pine, and whether they depend on location of the stand within the province. The three study regions were in northwest Ontario, north of Atikokan; northeast Ontario, north of Espanola; and in the Algonquin region from Dacre to Whitney.

The Soo Timber Supply Area (TSA) is located in the Vancouver Forest Region. Most of the TSA is physically or economically inoperable and the current timber harvesting land base is only about 15% of the total land base of 719,503 hectares. After a brief description of the TSA, this report reviews the principles for determining the allowable annual cut for the TSA and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the land base contributing to the timber harvest, timber license revision, areas not satisfactorily restocked, regeneration delay, silvicultural systems, integrated resource management objectives, planning delays, harvest flow, and the community dependence on the forest industry. The appendix contains relevant sections of forestry legislation.

In the review, the public was encouraged to evaluate the information in a timber supply discussion paper and two technical reports (a timber supply analysis and a socio-economic analysis) and to provide additional information. The report first outlines the public review process and the types of public input received. It then summarizes the public input in sufficient detail to indicate the range of input received. Issues considered in the submissions related to such matters as timber productivity estimates, the size of the timber harvesting land base, forest volume estimates, forest cover requirements, employment and community impacts, non-timber values, adjustment of the allowable annual cut, and commercial thinning.

This booklet was written to help people who have an intellectual disability, their friends, family members, and support workers find a literacy program that includes people who have differences. It provides questions that can be asked in the search for such a program in order to help find a place where one can learn in a safe, friendly environment. Under each question, relevant issues are discussed and guidelines are provided on what the questioner needs to listen for. The questions cover such matters as the philosophy of the literacy program, what information is needed about the program applicant, the inclusiveness of the program, the costs and accessibility of the program, supports and services provided, teaching methods and materials used, student evaluation, tutors and their training, and confidentiality of information.

Many adults with intellectual disabilities continue to be denied access to literacy education due to such barriers as perceived ineligibility for literacy programs, program unfriendliness, and inadequate support. This guide for literacy program managers and coordinators was produced to help address this problem. It provides basic information needed to become more knowledgeable about people labelled as having an intellectual disability, as well as practical teaching strategies, suggestions for designing inclusive programs, and notes on additional resources. It also contains sections on the link between literacy, disability, and human rights; definitions of disability and literacy; the effects of exclusion from the mainstream on people with intellectual disabilities, illustrated by personal life stories; barriers to participation in literacy programs; and components of successful literacy programs.

Many adults with intellectual disabilities continue to be denied access to literacy education due to such barriers as perceived ineligibility for enrolment, lack of appropriate support, and literacy programs that are unfriendly to the disabled. This guide was produced to help literacy tutors and educators address this problem. Sections of the guide cover the basic human right to literacy, the definitions of literacy, what is known about literacy levels of people with an intellectual disability, the effects of exclusion of such people from the mainstream of life, barriers to participation in literacy programs, strategies for tutors and educators, and components of successful literacy programs. The guide also includes life stories of people with intellectual disabilities in order to illustrate their problems and achievements, as well as suggestions for using the guide as a resource for training.

This paper deals with the fundamental elements of the initiative: increased autonomy, enhanced accountability and a focus on performance and results. It describes the mode of operation and intended effects of each of these three elements. It then discusses how far the SOA initiative has progressed in relation to these three elements, what barriers have been encountered and what might be done to remove the barriers and strengthen the design and implementation of the approach.

Stamp Falls Fishway counts, adipose clip/CWT recovery and biological sampling of chinook salmon escapements in Stamp River and Robertson Creek Hatchery, 1994

The key stream program began in 1984 in response to objectives set out in the Canada-United States Salmon Treaty. This report deals with the termination of spawning escapement of chinook salmon to the Stamp River and related biological information. The study was conducted to estimate the total chinook salmon escapement to the Stamp River; to determine the age and sex composition of both the in-river population and hatchery returns of chinook salmon to the system; and to estimate the total escapement of coded wire tagged chinook salmon to the system, thereby assessing the hatchery contribution to the total escapement. Escapement estimates were derived using visual counts at the Stamp Falls fishway and brailer counts at Robertson Creek Hatchery. Estimates of coded wire tag return, adipose-clip returns, and hatchery contributions were produced using dead recoveries of chinook salmon throughout the Stamp River and safe returns of chinook salmon to Robertson Creek Hatchery.

This report is one of a series designed to provide objective analysis and interpretation of data that will help identify significant ecological conditions and trends. The theme of the report is climate variability and change. The report introduces the evidence for climate variability and change in Canada, and expands on past discussions of temperature by considering seasonal and daily patterns of long-term temperature change. It indicates the seasons and the times of day when greatest rises have occurred and provides corroboration of temperature trend patterns from lake ice data. The report also examines Canadian trends in precipitation and cloudiness, two other climate elements that are significant in understanding global climate change. This section considers the regional trends and times of year that changes have been observed. The report conclusion puts climate change and variability into a wider perspective.

This volume analyzes the relevant data on the performance of Canadian schools, evaluating the state of primary and secondary education in Canada and offering a guide to where the educational system should be heading. The author begins by describing what contributes to a good education and notes that although primary and secondary education is accessible, not all young Canadians are taking advantage of this, as evidenced by the problem of dropouts. The following chapter summarizes results of recent opinion polls regarding the quality of schooling. More objective judgments of educational quality (the international, interprovincial, and intertemporal comparisons of student achievement) are then discussed and the validity of tests is evaluated. The final chapters describe various factors that influence school outcomes and the effectiveness of schools, and discuss some current educational policy questions. The author's findings are amplified by comments in two appended papers by educational specialists.

This report analyzes three years of Offshore Data Gathering Program directional wave spectra from 57 archived locations in the northeast Pacific Ocean in order to develop a statistical description of the wave climate for the west coast of Canada. The fundamental data set for the statistical analysis is provided by fits to the Program spectra from a 10-parameter model spectrum based on the 6-parameter model of Ochi and Hubble (1976). The report examines annual and seasonal statistics for the complete data set and for subsets based on a regional analysis. The report generates a family of directional spectra, having known confidence levels, for each data subset for directed application in ship operability assessment and structural design. The results enable a set of probability directional wave spectra to be generated for any input significant wave height, time of year, and west coast region, as required for the given application.

Over the past 20 years, Hamilton Harbour has become one of the most important nesting sites for colonial waterbirds on the Great Lakes in terms of both species diversity and numbers of breeding birds. This increase in the use of the harbor as a nesting site is mainly due to the creation of suitable nesting habitat. This report updates the status of colonial waterbird breeding populations in the harbor, describes how human changes to the landscape along with natural succession and interspecies competition have affected nest distributions in the harbor, and reviews bird conservation and control efforts. Species studied include the double-breasted cormorant, the black-crowned night heron, herring gulls, ring-billed gulls, Caspian tern, and common tern. The paper provides a framework for making effective decisions regarding the future of colonial waterbirds nesting in the harbor.

This report summarizes a portion of the ongoing Fraser River Action Plan investigations of pulp mill effluent effects on aquatic life. The report presents the results of a toxicity experiment using bleached kraft mill effluent from a mill on the Thompson River in Kamloops, British Columbia. This effluent has the potential for both nutrient enrichment and toxic effects on aquatic ecosystems. The experiment was designed as a first attempt to examine the relative nature of these two effects as determined by the response to the effluent of the mayfly, an abundant benthic macroinvertebrate in the river. Food-dependent effects were determined by exposing the mayflies to effluent for two weeks within artificial streams arranged in a 2x3 factorial design. Responses measured included survival, growth, and development. Possible mechanisms for the responses are discussed.

The report describes case studies of two existing SFEM-based reliability analysis programs (NESSUS and CALREL-FEAP), with discussion of their methodology, main features, structure, and capabilities. The report then presents the design and implementation of a software package for random field discretization (RANFLD) and a SFEM-based reliability analysis (STOVAST), the latter designed for operation with the commercial VAST finite element analysis system. The package was verified using several beam and plate problems. Finally, the report discusses bias and modelling errors in SFEM-based reliability analysis. On completion of the proposed Kernano II project, flow in the Nechako River will decrease and water temperature regimes within the river will be altered.

This study examines the potential for various fish species to consume juvenile chinook salmon prior to further water withdrawal from the river. Investigators examined the distribution, diet, and potential for consumption of juvenile chinook by rainbow trout (Oncorhynchus mykiss), northern squawfish (Ptychocheilus oregonensis), mountain whitefish (Prosopium williamsoni), and bull trout (Salvelinus confluentus). Results presented in the study include fish stomach contents (1990-91), catch/effort of piscivorous fish species, relative consumption by weight, size of prey items consumed, and relative consumption of all fish and of chinook salmon. Stranded oil in coarse sediment experiments (SOCSEX II)

This project experimentally investigated oil-sediment interactions in order to provide insight into the processes and factors that cause and control oil penetration and retention on coarse sediment beaches. The investigators conducted studies using sediments in columns, introducing oil onto the water surfaced of the column and allowing the oil to penetrate into the sediments during a simulated low tide and to be removed from the water surface during the following simulated high tide. The investigators recorded oil penetration depths and calculated the volume of oil retained in the subsurface sediments for each experiment. The experiments used four control temperatures, ten test oils, and 16 sediment types. Complementary studies included estimation of number of grains, total surface area, and grain/grain contacts per unit volume. The ability of an oil to penetrate sediment was ranked from the test data and defined as penetration potential. CA EV ND SC

This report describes redfish trawling tests conducted to investigate methods of improving catch size selectivity. The stern trawler had its standard model 96 bottom trawl converted to a trouser trawl with the addition of a 40-millimeter mesh divider panel and a divided extension to accommodate both an experimental and a 40-millimeter control codend. The experimental codend contained a nominal mesh size of 115, 105, or 90 millimeters and was rigged with and without shortened lastride ropes. The objective of the selectivity tests was to reduce below 5% the amount of under-23-centimeter redfish in the catch while maintaining a large percentage of commercial-sized fish. The report compares the selectivity results using codends of similar mesh size with lastride ropes and without the ropes. It also notes the optimal trawl setup for the best combination of selectivity and retention of commercial-sized redfish.

Where data were lacking, an experimental program was designed to provide additional information. This included making and testing 16 emulsions prepared by two different methods. The report describes these experiments and analyzes the data to determine if natural groupings of viscosity and oil-seawater interfacial tension exist for fresh and evaporated oils and emulsions. The report presents viscosity data for 89 oils and oil-seawater interfacial tension data for 61 oils, in the form of special box plots. The appendices include descriptions of the procedures for making emulsions and for measuring viscosity and interfacial tension; data tables; and a review of laboratory methods for weathering oils.

MICROLOG 96-02218 (1 fiche)

This report summarizes the proceedings of a working session which brought together over 50 leaders of British Columbia's business, labor, government, and immigrant investment communities to discuss a variety of issues related to immigrants who undertake business investments in the province. The session was organized to pursue four specific objectives: attracting and increasing immigrant investment, building partnerships, developing social infrastructure, and providing feedback on proposed changes to the federal Immigrant Investor Program. Session findings are presented under two main categories: barriers to immigrant investment, including cultural differences, communication gaps, governmental structure, business arrangements, and workforce skills; and opportunities for the future, including tax and regulatory changes, new business arrangements, improved communication, labor force training, and building on the province's strengths.

The purpose of this study is to assist in formulating and evaluating five strategy options for controlling air emissions of nitrogen oxides (NOx) and volatile organic compounds (VOC) in Ontario. The study opens with a summary of present NOx and VOC emissions from natural, mobile, and stationary sources. It then presents base-case projected emissions of NOx and VOC from selected stationary and mobile sources such as industrial boilers, solvent use, and vehicles. The emissions summary and base-case forecasts are used mainly to evaluate control options for each of the selected sources. Subsequent sections of the study review information on control actions and costs for the stationary and mobile sources, construct an emissions reduction supply curve indicating the actions that can be undertaken at or below a given incremental cost, and provide a framework and parameters for evaluating the benefits of reductions in tropospheric ozone. The appendices include details on the study methodologies.

This report presents results of a survey of oil and gas wellsites in east central Alberta undertaken to compare methods for evaluating soil compaction on wellsites and to evaluate the extent of soil compaction on wellsites with different soil types and different reclamation conditions. The six methods of evaluating soil compaction were those based on bulk density, corrected bulk density, total porosity, macropore volume, mechanical impedance, and estimated hydraulic conductivity. The methods were compared according to such criteria as cost and ease of use. The results include comparison of soil compaction values between wellsites and adjacent farmland, and between reclaimed and unreclaimed parts of wellsites.

MICROLOG 96-02391 (1 fiche)

The Saskatchewan Assessment Management Agency and the cities of Regina, Saskatoon, Prince Albert, and Moose Jaw are preparing for an assessment revaluation of real property for tax purposes by 1997. This paper reviews the impacts of an assessment revaluation on tax incidence and examines two optional tax policy mechanisms that provide alternate ways to manage the tax shifts. The paper begins with a background on provincial legislation on tax assessment, the role of the Agency, and proposed legislative amendments. It then discusses such issues as equity and fair value, the expected tax shifts from revaluation, tax policy tools, application of percentage of value and of mill rates, tax policy management, funding formulas, and evaluation criteria for tax policy design. Tax assessment options used in other provinces are also outlined. Includes glossary.

Recent assessment appeal decisions, and differences among three municipal acts in Saskatchewan, have resulted in financial uncertainty for industry and local governments regarding whether certain machinery and equipment for mines, pipelines, and oil/gas wells are part of the local government tax base and consequently assessable. This paper is intended to foster discussion on issues and options related to taxation of such equipment and machinery. It first reviews key legislative provisions regarding municipal taxation and recent appeal decisions on industrial tax assessment. The paper then assesses the possible impacts of changes in equipment and machinery assessment on industry, local governments, and the provincial governments. It also outlines key issues to be considered and four basic options for change: retention of the existing tax base, expand the machinery and equipment tax base, limit the tax base expansion, and take no clarifying actions.

This report presents the temperature measurements from seven full-scale fire resistance tests conducted on non-insulated, loaded and non-loaded, regular gypsum board wall protected assemblies. The assemblies consisted of either one layer of gypsum board on both the exposed and unexposed sides using wood studs, and two layers of board on both the exposed and unexposed sides using lightweight steel and wood studs. The investigators evaluated three regular gypsum boards with different masses per unit area: 7.82 kilograms per cubic meter (kg/m³) with no glass fiber in the gypsum core, 7.35 kg/m³ with glass fiber in the gypsum core, and 7.27 kg/m³ with no glass fiber in the gypsum core. The tests were conducted to determine the fire resistance rating of the assemblies. The report includes temperatures measured on the gypsum board surfaces and on the studs. The bulk of the report consists of tabular data.

To gain a better understanding of current thermal well pumping technology, avoid duplication of previous research, and initiate research on thermal well pumping from a common reference, the AOS-TRA/Industry Thermal Well Pumping Steering Committee circulated a questionnaire to industry participants who had experience in operating thermal projects. The questionnaire was designed to document what the companies and projects had done or were doing with regards to their pumping operations and how they handled any problems encountered. This report presents the findings of the questionnaire survey in the following sections: types of projects undertaken; well completion design; types of pumps used; pump operating options; and problem areas, including sand control, vapor interference, scaling, erosion or corrosion, and rod fall. The appendix includes a copy of the questionnaire.

Blue Heron Market Gardens near Canwood, Saskatchewan, operates a fruit and vegetable farm which includes a strawberry operation. The company is seeking processing opportunities for currently unsold strawberries it produces. This report presents an evaluation of these opportunities and a framework to assist the company's owners in evaluating them. A summary table evaluates each opportunity based on the criteria of niche compatibility, revenue potential, costs, distribution and marketing issues, competitors, related opportunities, and regulatory issues. The product opportunities evaluated include dried and frozen strawberries, fruit leathers, jams and jellies, perogies, and ice cream or yogurt.

This report discusses the major market and product trends impacting on the tourism and recreation. After an introduction on worldwide tourism and on Ontario tourism in particular, the second section of the report summarizes tourism market trends by subsectors segmented according to demographics, personality traits, geographic origin, and purpose of trip. Section three reviews tourism product trends by product segment, including amusement attractions, culture/arts, festivals or special events, adventure and nature tourism, shopping, tours, and recreational activities such as hiking, skiing, boating, and camping. This section also discusses trends impacting on tourism support products and services such as hotels, restaurants, and visitor centers. Section four analyzes trends in tourism marketing and communications. The final section summarizes the implications of the report for tourism development in the Lake Ontario Greenway.

Advances in the assessment of violent and high risk offenders have yet to significantly impact on intervention strategies. Progress in the areas of treatment of sexual offenders and substance abuse has direct application to the treatment of violent offenders. This literature illustrates the importance of matching offenders to the appropriate level of intervention and providing a continuum of intervention from intake to community follow-up and supervision. In order to help frame questions for future investigations and to collate the literature, this paper considers the following issues: heterogeneity of offenders; developmental programs; co-morbidity concerns; management of offenders; self-regulation strategies; cognitive style; assessment of treatment gain and outcome measures; setting characteristics; staff training and therapist characteristics. The summary then attempts to distill from the literature what can be concluded regarding the treatment of violent offenders and future directions.

The purpose of this report is to present a preliminary estimate of the potential contribution of forestry biomass to Canada's energy requirements to the year 2025. It begins with a review of forestry biomass conversion technologies, from which three reference cases have been formulated to facilitate discussion: direction conversion of wood to electricity in a 50-megawatt boiler; low-Btu gasification of wood combined with on-site utilization; and wood gasification combined with methanol production from the resulting synthesis gas. The report then estimates the total resource of forest biomass in Canada and evaluates sources of supply, including forest residues and energy plantations. It discusses principal uses for the different types of energy (steam, electricity, fuels) that can be produced from forest biomass, the factors affecting implementation of forest biomass energy technologies (including institutional constraints and environmental and social impacts), and the costs of energy produced by the three reference cases.

The goal of this paper is to examine and discuss some alternative ways of determining tsunami flood levels for Port Alberni and other coastal sites in British Columbia. Tsunami flood levels are required for inclusion in city plans and to help establish building regulations for new construction so that damage from any future tsunami will be minimized and loss of life avoided. The paper discusses the results of previous report on the 1964 Port Alberni tsunami and some general tsunami reports and papers. Records of the 1964 tsunami were studied and the combinations of tide and tsunami which occurred are separated for discussion. Various possible combinations of total water levels are given which could be used as tsunami flood levels. The report concludes with recommendations for the tsunami safe level, tsunami flood level, and tsunami minimum level for Port Alberni, as well as a recommendation on estimating tsunami levels for other coastal sites.

By Derek Tripp. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, Integrated Resources Policy Branch, 1995. xvi, 82 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 96-02147 (2 fiche)

This report evaluates the extent to which logging companies in the Chilliwack and Mid-Coast Forest Districts of British Columbia complied with the Coastal Fisheries Forestry Guidelines in cut blocks logged between 1988 and 1992; the report also assesses the effectiveness of the guidelines when they were applied. The report first describes the methods used to audit compliance with the guidelines, and the characteristics of the cut blocks in the area evaluated. It then examines the impacts on streams of logging activities and discusses causes of specific problems such as debris flows, road failures, and poor cleanup of debris. Finally, the report assesses the effectiveness of streamside management guidelines and the degree of compliance with road and bridge guidelines. An evaluation of overall compliance with the guidelines includes discussion of the relation between compliance and stream impacts.

The Use of geographic information systems for environmental management of the Minto/Chipman coalfield

A program developed by NB Coal for rehabilitation of strip-mined lands in the Minto/Chipman coal fields required the company to contour all lands disturbed since 1969, to vegetate high-erosion areas, and to rectify all environmental problems resulting from coal operations. Environmental management records for the strip-mined area are not readily accessible and difficult to maintain and verify. This report describes a project to develop an environmental management tool for the region using a geographic information system (GIS) to assist in the evaluation of reclamation plans and environmental assessments, and to monitor ongoing strip-mining operations. The GIS provided a means to store and integrate spatially referenced data sets for two mining operations in this project. The data sets included base maps, mine plans, geologic maps, hydrologic data, and LANDSAT images. Analyses of the LANDSAT images enabled estimation of vegetation recovery in the disturbed areas, and the images were then utilized to update the inventory of mined lands in the Minto/Chipman coal fields.

Seed potato growers can reduce production costs and increase yields by increasing the number of desirable-sized seed potatoes produced by each plant. Tuberculation can be controlled by changing the hormonal balance within the potato plant through application of plant growth regulators. The Use of virus attachment proteins for the targeting of liposome encapsulated materials to host cells

The objective of this study was to develop a protocol to isolate adequate amounts of sigma-1 protein, the protein which is responsible for the specific recognition and attachment of a virus to the host cell. The sigma-1 protein could then be conjugated to the exterior of liposomes, to specifically deliver the contents of the liposome to a host target cell. The advantage of this method over other means, such as antibodies and other ligands, is that virus attachment proteins retain fusogenic activity, possibly allowing greater efficiency in delivery of the contents of the liposome inside the cell. This paper introduces the topic of virus attachment proteins and describes experiments to purify reovirus, isolate biologically active reovirus type 3 sigma-1 protein, and generate polyclonal anti-sigma-1 antibodies. Resource managers and policymakers in the province must integrate the landscape ecological perspective into established systems of resource management planning. The Forest Landscape Ecology Program commissioned a survey of their concerns and information needs with respect to this process. This report summarizes the issues and concerns reported by the respondents into 28 common themes grouped into the following general areas of activity: managing for biodiversity, wildlife management and habitat supply, ecosystem inventory and management, natural heritage definition and conservation, managing for multiple use, and assessing effects of development activities. The participants also reported on four main types of information needs.

The Value of travel time and benefits of time savings

By Alex Kazakov, S. Aleksa and T. Miller. Downsview, ON : Ministry of Transportation, Research & Development Branch, 1994. iv, 12 p. : Bibl. MICROLOG 96-02769 (1 fiche)

Travel time savings (TTS) is one of the major benefits of transportation improvements. TTS reflect the amount of time that can be substituted from one activity or trip purpose to another activity or trip purpose. This report presents estimated values of travel time (VTT) specific to Ontario's travel experiences and planning needs. The VTT estimation methodology involved a survey using a questionnaire designed to examine travel time tradeoffs and travel decisions of a sample of Ontario respondents. The questions reflected well-known travel situations and traffic problems, and respondents were asked to trade off their travel time between alternative travel and non-travel uses. Ratios of travel time tradeoffs were then derived and applied to average wage rates to obtain values of leisure and commuting travel time. ON PR SC TR

The British Columbia Ministry of Transportation and Highways initiated an economic analysis project to develop a methodology for performing social cost benefit analysis of highway improvements. A major road user cost component for incorporation into the analysis is the value of travel time savings. This report first summarizes the findings of the Ministry's research which produced the values of travel time savings used for economic appraisals, then compiles the five reports commissioned for that research. The first report determines vehicle travel time for drives and passengers of light vehicles, city buses, and trucks. The second report results from a pilot survey which tested and confirmed the findings of the first report for passenger cars. The third report considers time-related costs of trucks and intercity buses, and the fourth revises the third report's data on trucks. The fifth report supplements the vehicle types considered in the third and fourth reports. BC PR SC TR

This paper assesses the current and potential VOC modelling needs of the British Columbia Ministry of Transportation and Highways in order to determine their relevance to policy analysis, capital project planning, design, programming of road investments, and rehabilitation project evaluation. The report discusses the technological, regulatory, and economic factors that limit the transferability of previously developed international VOC data to Ministry requirements. It then reviews a number of models with respect to VOC estimation methodology and transferability to British Columbia. The report ends with a recommendation of selected models for Ministry use. The appendices include a review of major VOC methods and a critique of the major VOC models.

Warning lighting devices on MTO vehicles : a survey of their use by district maintenance staff

By Lina Raimondo. Toronto : Ministry of Transportation, Research & Development Branch, 1994. vi, 47 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-02775 (1 fiche)

Perceived concerns regarding unauthorized use of lighting devices and applications for Ontario Ministry of Transportation maintenance operations prompted a study of warning lighting devices on Ministry maintenance vehicles. This report presents results of a survey of Ministry respondents who were asked to identify issues and concerns regarding present specifications of warning light use, local attempts to improve the system, and the perceived advantages and/or drawbacks of their efforts. The survey questionnaire also provided an occasion to discuss general concerns with regard to lighting device use by external organizations and agencies and the observed relational effects on the Ministry. The questionnaire responses provided useful information on the types of vehicular lighting devices used as well as explaining and/or justifying their selection. The survey also shed light on the conditions, concerns, and safety risks involved with respect to particular maintenance operations.

MICROLOG 96-02452 (1 fiche)

This report presents results from a project that quantified the loadings from one chemical plant and three pulp and paper plants in the Fraser River Basin. At each plant, the investigators sampled and analyzed effluent over a 24-hour period using procedures recommended by Environment Canada. Bioassay tests were also carried out to determine toxicity and inhibition of algal growth caused by the effluent samples. Results presented include annual and monthly mean, standard deviation, maximum and minimum loadings, and loadings of specific parameters (and their trends over time, 1990-93). Parameters measured included biochemical oxygen demand, chemical oxygen demand, alkalinity, metals, organic compounds, adsorbable organic halogen, total suspended solids, and acute, sub-acute, and chronic toxicity.

The Waterfront Trail : liability and risk management issues

McCarthy, Tétrault (Firm). Toronto : Waterfront Regeneration Trust, 1995. 33 p. : Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-02304 (1 fiche)

This report focuses on the legal framework and the responsibilities of the municipalities managing their respective portions of the Waterfront Trail in Ontario. The first section describes the legal duty imposed on trail managers to take reasonable care to provide safe public roads and trails. This duty is discussed with reference to the Municipal Act and the Occupiers' Liability Act. The second section considers the legal liability that may be imposed on trail managers where a failure to satisfy the statutory duty of care results in personal injury or property damage. This section reviews essential elements of a negligence claim and some of the more common defenses against such claims. Section three outlines a framework for a program of risk management or mitigation to address the possibility of negligence claims and to minimize injury or damage to trail users.

A White paper on proposed reforms to the environmental assessment process

Newfoundland. Dept. of the Environment. St. John's : The Dept., 1995. iv, 174 p.
MICROLOG 96-02615 (2 fiche)

This paper reports on the findings and conclusions arising out of the Newfoundland government's review of its existing environmental assessment processes. The review was conducted to determine the extent to which these processes may be creating unnecessary impediments to economic development, to identify means by which any such impediment could be overcome without compromising environmental policy principles, and to assess the overall strengths and weaknesses of the processes from an administrative perspective. The review begins with background on the five steps of the existing environmental assessment review process and a summary of environmental assessment project activity, 1989-94. The review then highlights major findings, including the government's own assessment and consultations with the private sector, government departments/agencies, environmental stakeholders, and the Round Table on Environment and the Economy. Proposed reforms are presented according to five objectives. The appendix contains a synopsis of the proposed reforms and copies of the existing Environmental Assessment Act and Regulations.

MICROLOG 96-02109 (1 fiche)

The Williams Lake Timber Supply Area (TSA) in south central British Columbia covers over 4.8 million hectares, of which about 34% is available for timber harvesting. After a brief description of the TSA, this report reviews the principles for determining the allowable annual cut for the TSA and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the existing forest inventory, the land base contributing to the timber harvest, regeneration delay, areas not satisfactorily restocked, silvicultural practices, commercial thinning, decay and waste, integrated resource management objectives, harvest flow alternatives, and community dependence on the forest industry. Appendices include relevant sections of forestry legislation and a summary of public input into the Williams Lake TSA Timber Supply Review.

This guide is designed to accompany a video workshop on chemically dependent women, their needs and related issues. The guide includes activities and exercises that accompany each video segment of the two videos in the workshop. The videos explore the myths and assumptions surrounding women's use of alcohol, the characteristics of women with substance abuse problems, the influence of certain life events on women's alcohol and drug use, and the impact of significant others and societal attitudes on women's drinking and/or response to treatment. The activities include quizzes, discussions, and brainstorming sessions. The guide also presents six case studies on intervention and treatment approaches; these were part of the workshop but not on the videos. Other sections of the guide include a list of gender stereotypes, outlines of self-help and program models, and a report on community-based treatment programs for Aboriginal women.

Part one of this report is an executive summary which reviews the book Women's Ways of Knowing by Belenky et al (1986) in order to present the book's key concepts, without analysis. This summary is intended to help staff and program deliverers at Correctional Service of Canada develop a clearer understanding of women's experience of life and learning. The book itself describes six different perspectives from which women view reality, how women understand knowledge, how education might meet women's needs, and what the characteristics of a women-centered educational model might be. Part two of the report is a series of charts that presents information from the book in a brief and easily readable format, including the characteristics of each of the six perspectives of knowing, the characteristics of a model of education for women compared to those of a traditional model, and techniques and observations related to teaching and communicating with women from all perspectives.

Other Canadian Reference Sources

- Available from Micromedia -

Canadian Index

A comprehensive index providing access to nearly 100,000 citations each year from: nine major daily newspapers, over 200 Canadian trade and business periodicals, over 50 specialized Canadian trade magazines for which indexing is unavailable elsewhere, and more than 350 general periodicals.

KIOSK: CBCA

KIOSK: CBCA is a reference tool which combines a high quality indexing and abstracting database (CBCA) with direct access to the fulltext content of the articles indexed.

CBCA Fulltext

CBCA Fulltext provides fulltext access to Canadian periodicals and current affairs information, and incorporates the largest and most-comprehensive subject guide to periodical literature. CBCA Fulltext allows searching on Windows, Macintosh, DOS and UNIX platforms.

CBCA OnDisc

CBCA OnDisc is the Knight Ridder CD-ROM version of the Canadian Index, giving you access to ten years of indexing. It includes every citation in the Canadian Index, plus thousands of informative abstracts which do not appear in the print edition.

KIOSK: Maclean's

Published in cooperation with Maclean's magazine, KIOSK: Maclean's contains every article and news report published by Canada's Weekly Newsmagazine over an eight year period.

CNI Clips: Press Clippings on Microfiche

CNI Clips is a unique service which provides the full text of more than 40,000 Canadian Press news stories and feature articles each year, and is delivered in a practical and economical microfiche format.

Canadian Education Index

Canadian Education Index covers more than 200 Canadian education periodicals, as well as reports and monographs from the educational research community across Canada. In addition, the Index covers report literature from government agencies, educational faculties and teachers' associations, and large school boards.

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus is a bilingual controlled vocabulary of over 5,000 terms, developed for the indexing and retrieval of French or English-language material in Canadian education, and is an invaluable research aid for users of the Canadian Education Index.
